Take a seat on the bed. How refreshing.
That breeze blowing in through the bars!
It was d-uce ily kind of you, Billy,
To fetch me around these cigars.
Have you seen what was said in the papers?
I take my departure to-night—
Am going for rest up the Hudson,
A rest of ten years—got a light?

Yes; that is the tune of it, Billy;
Ten years! Ah, well, but it seems
Like one of those horrible visions
That frighten a man in his dreams.
Ten years in the cell of a prison—
I can't comprehend it as yet;
But I fancy before it is over
I shall learn what it means—and forget!

It's curious, isn't it, Billy,
What changes a twelvemonth may bring?
Last year I was in Saratoga,
As happy and rich as a king;
I was laying in pools on the races,
And feeling the waiters and grooms,
And sipping mint-juleps at twilight—
And to-day I am here in the Tombs!

What led me to do it? What always
Leads man to destruction and crime?
The prodigal son whom we read of
Has changed somewhat in our time.
He spends his substance as freely
As the biblical fellow of old,
But when it is gone he fancies
The husks will turn into gold!

Champagne—a box at the opera—
High stakes while fortune was flush—
The passionate kisses of women
Whose cheeks had forgotten to blush:
The old, old story, Billy,
Of pleasures that end in tears—
The froth that foams for an hour,
The dregs that are tasted for years!

Last night, as I sat here and pondered
On the end of my evil ways,
There rose, like a phantom before me,
The vision of boyhood's days;
I thought of the old home, Billy,
Of the school-house that stood on the hill,
Of the brook that flowed through the meadow—
I can hear its music still!

And I thought of my mother, Billy,
Of the mother who taught me to pray,
Whose love was the priceless treasure
That, heedless, I cast away.
I saw again, in my visions,
The fresh-lipped, careless boy,
To whom the future was boundless,
And the world but a mighty toy!

I thought of all this as I sat here—
Of my ruined and wasted life—
And the pangs of remorse were bitter—
They pierced my heart like a knife!
It takes some courage, Billy,
To laugh in the face of Fate,
When the yearnings and hopes of manhood
Are blasted at twenty-eight!

Well, give us your hand, old fellow—
May you always be happy and thrive;
I shall look for you up at the depot
In the Summer of eighty-five!
Meantime, if you find it convenient,
And feel a desire to roam,
Call up at my house on the Hudson—
You'll probably find me at home!

CHAPTER XIX.

ERNESTINE ASHDALE.

Roy looked helplessly at his friend. At these last words, over him had come a sickening sense of the humiliating part he was playing in this drama, planned and perfected in his interest, it is true; but without the counsel or foreknowledge, without even his sympathy. His honor, manhood, honor, all ignored; the business, in its essence, an unscrupulous plot for money!

"How can you expect me to transfer my affections and respect in this way?" he protested. "A little while ago you bade me learn to love Beatrice, and teach her to love me. Now you ask me to begin to feel for her the first attachment to one of her sex I had ever known. Of what avail were my efforts? Of none! She could not learn to love me, and she is gone. Now you wish me to turn over the rejected offering to her sister, as if it were nothing but a bunch of flowers which might be given at will to anybody."

The lawyer made no reply.

"What fruit would a marriage such as this, if it were possible, bear, except misery for both? Percival Redgrave's fortune, large as it is, could not charm away that. Why not let me fight my battle of life as others of my age do? I am young, strong, hopeful, not a greater fool than many. The struggle cannot be so terrible, since so many others have come out of the thickest of it in safety."

Mr. Kendryn rose, with a dark frown on his face.

"I perceive that many new ideas have come to you during my absence, Roy; but I might have known. It is very clear that you are going to be impracticable."

"I hope not, sir."

"Well, there—go down-stairs. You must not leave Wilton to-night—that is settled. In the morning we will talk over matters again. Perhaps you will see your duty better than you do now. And now go—and be introduced to Miss Ashdale. She is very beautiful—I think, far more beautiful than Beatrice—but judge for yourself. Judge for yourself," he repeated.

Roy took his departure. When he had gone, his friend proceeded with his toilet, wearing a by no means pleasant countenance.

"Why will they be so headstrong? Young, foolish, obstinate—ungrateful as well. He talks of transferring his love like a bunch of flowers, as if I did not know as well as he that he is entangled with that little minx, Ursula. Confound her! has it gone? But it must be stopped forthwith. He shall not go away—ruin himself! Patience, patience! I arrived just in time—a few hours later and all would have been in confusion. A good omen! We shall come out right yet. Mr. Archbald Redgrave's face at my reappearance—a study"—mused the lawyer, noting his own dark smile in the glass—"astonishment—anger—conjecture—was there anything like alarm there? His cordiality—bah! He shall see if he will assume lordly airs with me. All these changes he has brought about—has he not begun too soon? Not too much zeal, Mr. Redgrave. I think this will be a waiting race."

And now, having accomplished the renovation of his appearance, Mr. Kendryn composed his countenance, and descended to the company below.

The room was now pretty nearly full. The Miss Maynwarings—those very charming girls, alike as two rosebuds from the same stalk—had arrived, attended by their brother. Miss Fanny Chasuble was also present, having come under the care of young Mr. Vane, who was studying with her father, the kindly old Doctor. The merry tinkle of the ladies' voices formed a treble for the deeper bass of the masculine utterance, and the scene was full of animation.

Mr. Kendryn's shrewd glance traveled from one group to another in search, no doubt, of those who most interested him.

Near the little table, on which the music was piled and which stood in the corner close by the rear window, sat Ernestine Ashdale. At one side of her leaned Roy, and nearly in front of her stood, with his gay simper, Mr. Lester Fitzallan. He was looking down at the young lady's handsome face with unmistakable admiration. Beautiful she certainly was—extremely so.

It was not the rather cold, melancholy beauty of her sister, but warmer and brighter, and more likely to please at first sight. She had the same lovely form, but her eyes were smaller, sparkling with vivacity, and her nose was a little retrousse. In manner she was altogether different from Beatrice, who was a little sad and reserved. This young lady, on the contrary, was full of life and gayety.

The splendor of her dress was already a subject of comment among the Miss Maynwarings and their friends at the other side of the room, who evidently viewed her on that account with some awe.

Little Ursula, Miss Chasuble and young Maynwaring formed another group, and the first named young lady was talking with wonderful animation. Mr. Kendryn's eyes may have played him false; but occasionally he thought he perceived Miss Redgrave's glance shoot quickly in the direction of Roy and as quickly become absorbed again in the cavalier who attended her.

And now, having satisfied himself, the lawyer gradually made his way to the spot where Mrs. Fitzallan and Archbald Redgrave were sitting.

"What a very lovely girl Miss Ashdale is," said the old lady, as he approached. "I see that my Lester has lost his heart already."

"You must hear her sing," returned Mr. Kendryn. "She has the most exquisite voice I ever listened to. I think—but, after all, that is not saying a great deal. I am not much of a critic."

"I shall be delighted," returned Mrs. Fitzallan, with effusion. "As soon as we come up from dinner we must place her at the piano. She will be a great acquisition to our society here. Apropos, Mr. Redgrave, did Miss Maynwaring tell you that their party is put off?"

"No; I think not. I have hardly had a word with them yet," returned that gentleman pleasantly.

"Yes; they have just heard of the death of someone in the family—a kind of distant aunt, or something—and though the connection was very distant, they think it would not look well."

"I am sorry; but I am rather glad, too; because I have been planning something of the kind to take place here at Wilton. I shall have to ask your counsel, Mrs. Fitzallan. It will be the first entertainment of any kind given at Wilton for years—many years—and we must make it creditable, you know."

"Certainly; by all means!" replied the old lady, delighted. "I hope it will be very soon;" and she sighed. "I shall never outgrow those follies, Mr. Kendryn, and you must not think me ridiculous."

"Certainly not, madame," said the lawyer, with his veiled smile—the least bit amused, but not scornful. "Let us keep young as long as we can—laugh at Father Time and turn our backs upon him."

"And you have already pondered your arrangements, I suppose, Mr. Redgrave? There are wonderful facilities here."

"I begin to appreciate them. You saw the lake, I think? It was nothing but a dark pool; but I really pride myself on the transformation I have made there. In a few days the weather will have turned colder and we shall have a skating-pond."

Mrs. Fitzallan nodded.

"A magnificent skating-pond!"

"The conservatory is nearly rebuilt, and you know it leads directly into the grounds near the lake, and I fancy we may have a genuine Russian Winter fete!"

"So we may! Excellent! What taste you have!" The lively grandam was as pleased over Mr. Redgrave's project as a girl of sixteen. She was in a wonderful fuss, and now ensued the discussion of details, in which debate Mr. Kendryn took no part, but seemed to listen very attentively.

This lasted even when they had been summoned to dinner, an event which presently occurred; but positions were altered. Mrs. Fitzallan's neighbors were Miss Letetia Maynwaring on one side and Mr. Vane on the other, and to these she related and discussed Mr. Redgrave's plans again.

The refection over, all returned to the room they had recently left, and now Miss Ashdale was pressed to sing.

To this she assented very graciously, and in a moment the buzz and hum of the room ceased as her rich contralto rang out. At her side stood Lester Fitzallan; near the mantelpiece lounged Roy, listening.

The former gentleman had heard operatic music—this very selection, also—oftener than he would have been able to count, but he certainly had never heard it with so much attention or enjoyment as now. For once the muscles and lines of his face ceased to wrinkle themselves into that peculiar simper which he so rarely put off; and he leaned by the piano, grave and appreciative, and visibly enjoying every note.

To Roy the song was a revelation. He listened transfixed. He could not have believed there was so much magic in the human voice. And how lovely the being who possessed that treasure of a voice!

When the melody died into silence, the applause, as may be supposed, was not stinted.

"How sweet! How cultivated!" cried old Mrs. Fitzallan. "Who was Miss Ashdale's master, Mr. Kendryn? You must know," she whispered across.

"No, madam."

"One would take him to be a professional."

Mr. Kendryn's face changed a little.

"Very charming," he said, with a faint reserve.

Young Fitzallan was chatting with the singer in his most agreeable vein.

"Upon my honor, I have never before heard anything so—so sweet, so delicious," he said, bending toward her and smiling with real pleasure, as he absently turned the leaves of the music-book. "After this I shall not consider music a bore. You have given me new ideas altogether, Miss Ashdale."

"Is it possible you ever considered music a bore?" she laughed radiantly. "What penance shall I impose after such a confession?"

"Ha-a—anything you like, I am sure," was the flattering reply. "Any penance you might impose would be—a—you know—a task I should do with a great deal of happiness."

"Then it shall be a light one, since you are so humble of heart, Mr. Fitzallan. You must sing for me."

He held up his hand in horrified protest.

"Oh—a—have mercy on me! If not on me, on the others in the room! Ha, ha! Mr. Redgrave would never forgive me for driving his guests away so soon. I never sang a note in my life, I assure you."

Roy was still lingering by the mantelpiece, and this last observation was quite audible. Was there not a faint sullkiness in his look? It seemed to him a kind of impertinence on the part of Fitzallan to get so well acquainted with this handsome young lady already. Here he himself had made comparatively no progress in her good graces.

"I don't know," said Mr. Fitzallan, "that it seems to me—I don't how or why, by Jove!—but it really seems to me that I have seen you somewhere before to-night."

She looked up in charming surprise.

"Are you in earnes?"

"I am, indeed. Your face reminds me—a—in fact, it is as if I had met it in a dream or something. Even your voice comes back to me—a—like a voice I had heard—a—I can't tell where."

She lowered her eyes and trifled with the keys of the piano, the flush of ever so faint a smile lingering.

"We must have met in that former world the poets speak of," she said. "I can't explain it otherwise."

There was a little silence, and then the lady said, changing the subject:

"We had such a dreary drive from the station. There is no pretty scenery in the neighborhood, is there? I see all is flat, I suppose."

"Oh, yes!" said Fitzallan, with charming enthusiasm. "Croydon Pool and the bridge are only about a mile—not over a mile and a half, at any rate—from here."

"But not in the direction we came?"

"To the right."

"And are they really worth seeing?"

"I should think so! Beautiful! The most romantic spot I ever visited—the place to spend hours in the—a—in contemplation—poetical musing—and—a—that sort of thing."

"But not at this season."

"Very pretty at all seasons; but more so in Summer, of course. I—a—have often passed hours there," said Mr. Fitzallan tenderly; and so he had, fishing and sleeping, and longing to be back in town. "To-morrow—it will be a good day, I think—we can visit the Pool, don't you think?"

"Not to-morrow, I fear. I have an engagement."

"An engagement already—and just arrived?"

"Yes," she smiled, the jewels on her slender white fingers flashing in the light as she touched the keys softly. "I made a little engagement at dinner."

"I can't imagine with whom."

"And you must not ask me to tell you; but my promise will not take me very far from Wilton."

Fitzallan thought a moment.

"Well, we must visit the Pool some other day. Possibly next week. Any day will suit me, because, you know, I am always idle."

"But I will not detain you, and not I, that you were going away—soon—very soon? I remember distinctly."

Mr. Fitzallan laughed very much.

"I intended to go, it is true; but—if I should have changed my mind?"

"You have changed it, then?"

"Yes; I don't know quite when. I shall go now," he replied slowly, and looking down at her with, perhaps, some significance.

"Then you will be here for the ball, or fete, or whatever it is to be? You heard them all talking of it at dinner?"

"Yes; I shall remain now. You see, there will be—a—unexpected attractions, Miss Ashdale," he said archly; "quite irresistible."

His dialogue also reached Roy's ears, and he seemed just a little annoyed. He did not now like Mr. Lester Fitzallan so well as when he was first introduced to that gentleman. He thought him much too forward. Acquaintance with this beautiful stranger was apparently ripening into something very much like friendship already. It really was impertinence.

"But won't you find it dull here?" she said.

"Very dull, unless you permit me—a—to come over and see you occasionally. I suppose you will take pity on me."

"Oh, certainly," she replied radiantly. "Come as often as you please. But I must warn you that I expect to go such a great deal, and you must not be vexed if you do not find me at home always."

"That is understood, of course."

"I promise you that I shall never deny you when I am home. Sometimes you will find me practicing my music, and you must not talk too much, or I should not get on."

"I shall not say a word! Merely look on and drink in the intoxicating melody. And so our treaty is made?"

"Our treaty is made," she laughed.

"What a fool the fellow is!" thought Roy, turning away, disgusted.

CHAPTER XX.

MRS. FITZALLAN'S NARRATIVE.

And now came Mrs. Fitzallan to insist upon another song.

"A ballad, you know, darling," she said, in a fat little whisper. "I am so fond of ballad music."

Ernestine complied very graciously, and while the air was full of the rich melody of her splendid voice, Mrs. Fitzallan seated herself in the large crimson chair near the fireplace and began a conversation with Roy.

"How very quiet you are, Mr. Bellington," she said.

"A silent man, you know," he smiled.

"Unlike my Lester. How agreeable he is making himself there at the piano! I really think he is captivated with Miss Ashdale."

"One would fancy so," said Roy carelessly. "I believe he has altered his intention of leaving us so soon."

"Indeed! And on Miss Ernestine's account, of course. How very glad I am! He will now have better amusement than teasing my poor parrot. What can you think of a young man of his age who passes the greater part of his time plaguing a poor bird?"

"He might do worse, of course; but better, too."

"A great deal better, that is certain. But he has taught Polly some wonderful accomplishments, Mr. Bellington—you really ought to see for yourself; and suppose you come over to-morrow—do!"

To-morrow! He was not to leave to-night—and really what could a day or two longer matter?

"About noon," continued the old lady. "You must see what a bird can be taught to do. It is wonderful, upon my word! I used to believe there never was such a stupid parrot; but Lester is so clever!"

Perhaps Roy had his own opinion of this sort of cleverness; but he assented cheerfully, and arranged with himself for a ride after breakfast and a brief halt at the Fitzallan cottage on his way back.

That night Roy and his friend Kendryn had another sederunt. It was brief; but seemed satisfactory to the latter, if no more; and when it had broken up he sat for an hour longer alone, smoking and studying the varying scenery of that magical theatre, the open fire. It was quite settled that Roy would not leave on the morrow—not for a day or two yet, perhaps. About what might happen next week there was no binding.

So next day, after breakfast, Roy took his usual ride, without any particular object or destination; but, about noon, he approached Mrs. Fitzallan's pretty cottage. At the gate, dismounting, he tied his horse: lifted the latch, and went on up the white graveled walk under the many trees on either side.

The old lady's face lit up, round as a moon and smiling, through the window-pane, and presently she appeared on the porch.

"What a sweet day! I declare it is not a bit like Winter."

"How do you do? No; it is really warm," said Roy; "and, in the sun, positively oppressive. What about that fete?"

"Do you know I am fretting over it—really worrying myself? I am so afraid we shall not have the lake frozen, and then, you see, we should lose one of the best features."

"Charming way to get a cold, though, don't you think? Dance in the ball-room, and then go outside to cool off."

"But we must exercise prudence, you know. And now come in; I promised to show you the parrot, and Polly is in the conservatory." Mrs. Fitzallan, a curious and sly twinkle in her eyes, led the way, and presently both entered the apartment she had designated.

The windows were all open to let in the sunshine and balmy air, and there was a delicious fragrance diffused around; and just on the other side of those banks of flower-pots, so tastefully piled, Roy thought he saw the tops of two human heads.

"Lester!" cried the old lady.

Lester Fitzallan's simpering face suddenly appeared peering over the tops of the flower-stalks, and then he saw the visitor.

"Ah—hallos—how do?" he said, with his chuckle, nodding graciously. "What a jolly nice day, isn't it? Come around."

This invitation was accepted, and there, in the most enchanting hat and riding-habit imaginable, stood beautiful Ernestine Ashdale.

Certainly, thought Roy, she was in this guise the most exquisite being he had ever seen. She was bending over a perch; in her hand a whip; her face downcast—he stopped short in admiration and surprise.

But she saw him in an instant.

"Where were you at breakfast? And where have you been since?" she said with her radiant smile.

"I was at breakfast before you had come down—off, too, no doubt; for I started rather early. Did anyone miss me?"

"All of us, certainly; and don't you think it was a little selfish to go away without giving notice? There was escort duty forgotten, for one thing, and ——"

"Pray, don't make my offense too heinous; and had you really no escort, Miss Ashdale?"

"I might not have had ——"

"Only I happened to be in the way, luckily," interrupted Fitzallan, with his agreeable chuckle, "and served as substitute."

"Oh!" said Roy, a little thoughtfully.

"What a giggling simpleton this fellow is!" was his private reflection. "He is pure vacancy of mind, and not good nature at all."

"She promised to come over this morning," said Mrs. Fitzallan, "just as you did, to see the parrot, and that accounts for your meeting. I had no idea that Lester was going to Wilton—he never tells me anything."

"Now, ma!" protested that gentleman, in a drawl that was particularly disgusting to Roy in his present mood, though last night he thought it rather amusing.

"Well, I shall not argue the point, Lester," said the old lady. "Come, Mr. Bellington, I shall show you my canary first, and then my parrot."

Mr. Bellington's interest in these wonders had quite vanished, and he would much rather have remained where he was; but this was not possible, and very reluctantly he followed Mrs. Fitzallan to the far end of the apartment, where the canary hung.

Here she made learned descent on her pet's many accomplishments, which her listener heard by no means so attentively as he might; but this subject at last being exhausted, she said:

"The more I see of Miss Ashdale, the lovelier she seems. I judge from her conversation that she has seen a good deal of the world. What a prize you will win if you marry her, Mr. Bellington!"

"Nothing more unlikely——" began Roy, flushing.

"Nonsense! I heard everything last night—the history of the Packet and all. There can be no other end, you know. Time sets all things right—a truth I find confirmed every day I live. Years ago, when the scandal at Wilton occurred, I little dreamed this would follow some day."

"Nothing has followed yet. You will be surprised, perhaps, to learn that I have never yet made myself acquainted with the facts of that scandal, Mrs. Fitzallan."

"Is it possible! No curiosity?"

"I merely know that Mr. Redgrave killed my father at Wilton, and that he was sorry for it afterwards, and hoped to make amends through the medium of his will."

"Percival Redgrave was not a good man in some sense; but it would be unfortunate if his deathbed effort to repair evil should be made null and void," said the old lady gravely.

"I am willing to do my part as a Christian and a man; but I owe something to the memory of my father," replied Roy.

"That depends how the case is viewed. I look at it in this way; faults on both sides. Let me tell you the story in my own way and examine it in that light—eh?"

Would he? He was only too eager. This old woman's volubility would now reveal that which he had longed to know, and was beginning to despair of learning elsewhere.

He bowed; but did not express impatience, for fear of alarming her. She proceeded.

"Mr. Redgrave, my friends, your father among the number, were—not to mince matters—fashionable rakes. Their life together at Wilton was not directed according to the world's code, or the code of ordinary morality. Heaven knows what scenes secretly took place there—the rumors about them were terrible. If the people of the neighborhood felt outraged and sought to interfere, it was only natural, but certainly very unfortunate. Defiance of public opinion was what induced Percival Redgrave to marry the third time."

"The third time?"

"Certainly. Did not you know that? It was the essence of the scandal," said the old lady, astonished.

Roy, of course, knew nothing about it; and he perceived that he had nearly betrayed himself.

He resolved to be more careful.

"The third time. There would have been nothing shocking in that if he had not married the daughter of his cook."

Again Roy was near forgetting himself.

"Think of it!" continued Mrs. Fitzallan, in horror. "The girl—Jennie Lawson her name was—they say, was very pretty; but uneducated and vulgar. Her head was turned. She imagined she was now mistress of Wilton. But from the day the wedding ceremony was performed she was Mr. Redgrave's wife only in name. In reality she was the victim of every expression of his anger at his own folly that he could inflict upon her. You see, he repented very soon. It is said she led a fearful life—the existence of a galley slave—cruelty, contempt, disgust, her portion every moment she lived. Thus passed several months."

"Well?" said Roy, eagerly intent.

"The girl had a strange, passionate nature, but amazing self-control. She bore her torture in silence. The people in the house wondered. No one ever saw her in tears; no one ever heard her return a harsh word for those she received. What could be the meaning of this? Percival Redgrave grew suspicious. He watched her in secret—set spies upon her. There were certain rewards. He redoubled his vigilance; and now followed the catastrophe. He obtained unquestionable proof that the girl was carrying on an intrigue with one of his guests. Soon an entertainment was given at Wilton. The neighbors were invited; but only a few came. The rest did not care to acknowledge Mr. Redgrave's alliance. It was his birthday fete. In the midst of the festivities he left his company and sought the woman he had made his wife. In her room he found a man, and their attitude was compromising beyond help. Mr. Redgrave rushed blindly into the darkened room and stabbed this man—struck him down. Calling the servants, Redgrave, with their aid, bore the shrieking wife to a mysterious apartment which is said to exist in the north wing at Wilton's Wish, and there she was kept imprisoned from that time forth. The person who was stabbed was taken away half an hour afterward, and next day Reginald Bellington was missing among the guests. The inference left is need not dwell upon, I am sure."

"No," said Roy, in a whisper of pain.

"Mr. Bellington died far away soon afterward. The wife remained in her prison, subject to pangs I hope the common report exaggerated. The scandal in the neighborhood was too dreadful to repeat. An effort was made to exert the law in her favor, and just as it took a shape of affairs she made her escape, and from that hour to the present she has never been heard of."

"What on earth are you talking about so earnestly—me?" suddenly cried Mr. Lester Fitzallan, peeping over.

"Nothing that concerns you, young man," replied the old lady, with her beaming smile. "You must not be so inquisitive."

"See what a lovely nosegay I have gathered for Miss Ashdale."

This young lady now appeared, his fragrant gift in her hand, and further discussion of that other subject was for the present at an end. But Roy had heard the story of his father's death at last.

The visitors remained at Mrs. Fitzallan's hospitable abode to luncheon, and afterwards the beauty of the day tempted them to a little game of croquet in the garden.

Fitzallan and Ernestine were in high spirits; but not so Roy Bellington. He was absent-minded, and even a little gloomy, and took his part in the game so listlessly that he was beaten outright.

Late in the afternoon he rode back to Wilton beside beautiful Miss Ashdale, and tried his best to converse with proper animation; but odd moments of reverie interrupted their dialogue, and when the ride was ended he felt obliged to offer his apologies.

"How singular," he thought, as he ascended the piazza steps, "that it should never have occurred to Kendryn, if he knows this story as I have heard it to-day, that in Delia Pin might possibly be found the lost Fennie Lawson!"

This reflection was, perhaps, a little ironical. He began to resent his friend's silence with undisguised bitterness.

As he entered the hall he met Ursula Redgrave. She looked at him gravely and curiously.

"What a delightful day you must have had!" she said.

Was she vexed with him about anything? Her tone was very satirical.

TO BE CONTINUED.

BARRY SULLIVAN AS HAMLET.

ROMANCE IN THE WOODS.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

There is a strange feeling creeps into the human heart while listening to a romance told at evening-time in a great wilderness, with nothing to break the solemn stillness except the sound of the distant waterfall, and the almost muffled murmur of the brook, whose clear waters gush and gurgle in its restless course near your feet. Should the moon be full, and its rays cast a silvery glow upon the mountain crest, and then glint and dance upon the swift-flowing water, parted by shade and shadow of the branches of the drooping willow or maple; and to add to the charm, if the whippoorwill should pipe his mournful song upon the night-wind from a distant ravine, you would then indeed feel the strange romance of the hour.

How much romance there lies hidden in the human breast but few fully realize until they wander over the earth, and draw from him or her the stories that slumber in the brain untold. Even in the woods, among the lowly and the humble, there are legends and traditions which date back for many years, and are told by the parents to the children. As they lose their charm of simplicity when robbed of the quaint gilding given them by the unlettered tongue of those who dwell in forests, the anomaly is as marked as that of the butterfly which leaves its chrysalis to reflect its bright and beautiful wings in the sunlight.

I am about to tell you a little story, dear reader, but I cannot vouch for its truth. I heard it in the woods by the light of a clear full moon, while the whippoorwill sang in the distant dell. It is a legend of the olden time, when the red man's war-whoop frightened the antelope, the wolf, and the deer that then roamed in numbers in the valley of the Neversink.

"I think there was a tribe of Indians once dwelt in this valley," I said to Satterlee.

"Yes, but that is more than a hundred years ago. A tribe known as the Delawares also roamed in the section now known as Sullivan and Delaware Counties," replied Satterlee. "Both tribes became extinct by a bloody war of extermination which raged between them. How this feud commenced I will tell you as I heard it from the lips of my grandfather when I was but a lad.

"The Neversinks were once a powerful tribe, and the Delawares equally powerful and cruel. Rum, disease, and a relentless war swept both tribes from the face of the earth. At the time my story commences, the chief of the Neversinks was called 'Red Panther,' and Panther Lake, over yonder mountain, was named after him, and in its clear waters his child met her melancholy death. The chief of the Delawares was known as 'Black Cloud,' and it was his son that cruelly murdered Red Panther's only child, and then commenced a war bitter and bloody.

"Red Panther's daughter was, indeed, the queen of her tribe. Her form was of exquisite mold—her eyes were large, lustrous and charming; while her hair, black as the raven's wing, hung with a wealth of beauty down her fair shoulders. She was called Raven Wing by her father, and he loved her as he loved the apple of his eye. Raven Wing had lived but twenty Summers when the hatchet of Black Cloud's son crashed through her brain, and left Red Panther childless."

"Were they lovers?" I asked.

"Yes; but you know the cruel nature of an Indian when jealous," replied Satterlee. "Do not interrupt me again. I will tell you the story as I heard it.

"At a war-dance given by the Neversinks, the Delawares were invited, as also the braves from distant tribes. A young warrior, handsome and brave, among the Neversinks, had fallen in love with the beautiful Raven Wing, and she regarded his advances with favor; but Red Panther, wishing to join the two tribes by marriage, frowned the advances of White Wolf—Black Cloud's only son—to the hand and heart of his daughter. The two chiefs drank and smoked the pipe of peace together on the night of the war-dance, and told each other how the nuptials of their children would strengthem them against the further encroachments of the white race, the strength or the power of rival tribes. A grand feast was given the following day, and ere the sun set in the west Red Panther was childless, and Black Cloud and his braves were fleeing to the mountains after leaving forty of them dead in the Valley of the Neversink.'

"How did the battle commence?" I asked.

"Don't break in on me ag'in," replied Satterlee, with some petulance. "Gim me time to tell you.

"Raven Wing loved the young warrior of her own tribe. He was handsome, bold and brave. And when she told him of the stern mandate of her father, that she must give him up and give her hand to White Wolf, she fell upon his breast and wept. He made no reply, but, folding her closer to his bosom, determined to die rather than see her in the arms of a rival. White Wolf knew of the love she entertained for the warrior of her own tribe, but he thought his fame and power as the son of Black Cloud would win her affections in time.

"It was after the feast, and while the sun was still lingering in the western horizon, that White Wolf sat in his canoe on Panther Lake, with Raven Wing by his side. He was telling her of his love, and how dreary life would be to him without the sunshine of her smile, when an arrow struck deep in his breast, and the blood spurted from the wound. He grasped the tomahawk from his belt, and in a moment its bright blade went crashing through Raven Wing's skull.

"'We die together,' he said, taking her lifeless form in his arms. This is treachery on the part of the Neversinks; and if the Great Spirit has ordained that White Wolf and Raven Wing shall not be joined in life, in death they shall be joined.'

"He leaped with his dead bride in the clear waters of the lake, which soon were crimson with their blood. The arrow of the revengeful warrior of the Neversinks had indeed done its bloody work. God alone saw the deed.

"When Red Panther found his cherished child, locked in the arms of White Wolf, floating upon the bosom of the lake, his agony was deep and burning. He swore eternal vengence against the Delawares, and the bloody work of extermination commenced. For many years the war raged with relentless fury, and now there is not one of the tribes left.

"On moonlight nights, it is said, the combat between the spirits of the rival tribes is still going on, and will for all time, while the body of Raven Wing and White Wolf can be seen floating upon the waters of the lake locked in death's embrace. The young warrior that lurked behind the tree, and sent the fatal arrow from his bow that caused White Wolf's death, was among the slain after the night of the feast."

Such is the story as I heard it, dear reader, whether it be true, or whether it be a fable. CAPT. BARCLEY.

MY BIRD.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY MARCUS MORIARTY.

My bird was happy and joyous still,
And deemed her cage a palace rich and rare;
And while her song my soul with bliss did fill,
I sank to rest from day's annoying care.
But as I slept, and dreamed my dream of joy,
An enemy, with stealthy step and sly,
Entered, intent my comfort to destroy,
And touch my soul with bitterness to die.

He whispered to my songstress fair a lie—
He said her cage was but a gilded cell—
A prison, where in bondage she must sigh,
If she heard not the tale which he would tell.
He said the golden bars were worthless lead,
Gilded to make them pleasing to the sight;
To prove the words his poisoned tongue had said,
His fingers blurred their lustre bright.

The morning broke; I listened for that song
Which never failed to greet the rising day;
I feared mishap, nor nursed conjecture long.
But rushed, to find my bird had flown away.
I knew not whither, but a sudden ray
Illumed my mind; the blurred, distorted bars,
The hand of envy in this deed display,
And a sense of loss my spirit jars.

I wept, ah! bitterly, my songstress fled,
Yet blamed her not; how could I justly blame?
Still, in my grief I could have wished me dead,
But then I asked: "Have others felt the same?"
Ah, yes! such is our life. When virtues claim
Esteem, and friendship's words rejoice our ear,
The poisoned tongue of envy oft doth name
Our highest good deceit, a gilded snare.

A LION-TAMER'S STORY.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY JAMES WHITE.

We used to call him "Old Clem." That's the only name we knew him by. He had been night-watchman of the theatre for over ten years. He was a reticent old fellow, and wasted no words over anybody. He was evidently very old, for his hair was white as silver, and he had not a tooth in his head. His skin was wrinkled and yellow as old parchment, and there was an ugly scar on his right cheek that extended to the eye, and gave that organ a distorted and ghastly look. There was another fearful scar on his neck; and his right hand looked as if it had at one time been riddled by the discharge of a shot-gun.

"Old Clem" had been often questioned by the boys respecting these disfigurements, but, as he invariably replied with muttered oaths, he had during late years been left severely alone. For he was a faithful servant, watchful as Cerberus; and, in spite of his surliness, was a favorite with the manager and the company.

One day he was missed from his post; and tidings reached the theatre that he had been stricken with paralysis. That night, after the performance, I went to the old man's lodgings, taking some brandy and other delicacies that I thought might be of service to him in his affliction. He was very grateful; and, as he temporarily rallied and was able to sit up, he told me, during one of my regular visits, the history of his life. It is a queer story, and I relate it, as well as I can remember, in his own language:

"My name is Clement Vantry, and I belong to a good English family. But I was a wild, dissolute boy, and ran away from school when I was barely thirteen, and shipped on board a Newcastle collier. After that I sailed in many waters—up North in the whale fisheries; to and fro in the Baltic with cargoes of hides and tallow; about the Mediterranean with oranges; in the West Indies aboard a sugar-trader; in the Brazils and the Spanish Main, and the wild wastes of the Pacific.

"Finally, I grew tired of the sea and determined to seek adventures ashore. With five hundred English sovereigns in my wallet, I deserted my ship at Alexandria, and made the best of my way to Cairo. Here I met the agent of an extensive European menagerie anxious to procure African lions, and it took but little persuasion to induce me to join a hunting expedition. Our guide was named Abdallah, and he had the prettiest daughter—a girl of twelve or so—that ever I clapped eyes on. I was desperately fond of Ottilia, and spent every spare hour I had with her; and, for that matter, she seemed to like me too. So it came to pass that when we sailed for Khartoum I left the balance of my five hundred pounds in her care.

"We had a devil of a time of it in the Nubian jungles, and what with the heat and the hunting I suffered a good deal. We were fairly successful in capturing young animals; but, while removing two fine cubs from a lair, Abdallah was attacked by the mother lioness, and before we could render him any assistance he received injuries that proved fatal. He had been the guide of over a dozen similar hunting expeditions, and with his dying breath he requested me in very fair English to care for his orphan daughter.

"When we returned to Cairo, I sought Ottilia, and broke the sad tidings to her as gently as I could. She did not weep or take on much; and when I reported his dying words, and asked her to be my daughter and accompany me, she was quite willing—in fact, it appeared to me that she was rather pleased to leave Cairo.

"I found, however, as we traveled to Alexandria, in the Nile boat, that she had learnt the use of English sovereigns while I had been away from her; and I began to wonder then whether golden visions of wealth and magnificence had not something to do in promoting the alacrity with which she accompanied me.

"Be this as it might, when my companion was clothed in European fashion I was very proud of her; and she made quite a sensation among the European inhabitants of Alexandria. She was not one of those swarthy brunettes so peculiar to Egypt. Her hair was a rich, warm auburn, like the sun on autumn leaves; her eyes were that changeful and uncertain hazel which no words can describe nor pigments portray—eyes that flicker like the opal, flashing red with rage, shining deep and tender with love; eyes that draw men's hearts to hers, as the magnet draws the needle; eyes that drive men mad, as magic philtres drive them mad. Her skin was of that subdued cream-color which never flushes, and which passion itself renders more pale. Add to this that she was in the full flower of womanhood, with perfect vitality, imperious desires and a craving for fondness for me, and it need not astonish you that instead of making her my daughter, I took this magnificently-developed half-bred Egyptian to wife.

"Ah, how well I remember those days! How I doted on her, and glorified her! She was all-perfect and all-beautiful in my eyes. She was my Juno—my Cleopatra; and like her and Antony in our earlier married days:

"'Eternity was in our lips and eyes,
Bliss in our brows' bent; none our parts so poor,
But was a race of heaven.'

"Somehow, I gradually got into the wild-animal business while living in Alexandria; for agents got to know me, and, instead of coming to Africa themselves, sent their orders to me. So I began to accumulate money; and Ottilia—why, she had two of the finest Arabian horses you ever saw. And the way she trained and rode them horses was a delight to see. Well, the lion business had been dull for some months, and I had half-a-dozen prime young animals on hand. They were as tame as cats, and I felt somehow that I could make money with them if I had them in London. All through life I have acted on impulse; and the idea no sooner got possession of me than I carried it out. I tell you, Ottilia and the Arabians and me and my cage of lions made a sensation in the English metropolis, and we soon became the recipients of a shower of shekels. I had a grand cage built for the animals, and a tip-top Arab dress for myself, and Ottilia she was gorgeously dressed, and her horses "Mohammed" and "Delgado" were grandly caparisoned, and we joined a traveling circus and made a big sensation wherever we went. I verily believe there never were six such young lions for performing. You see, I had reared them since they were a few weeks old, and as they grew up they just played with me like kittens. They never needed a whip, but I used to take one into the cage as a make-believe, you understand. There wouldn't have been any excitement if the audience had known that the animals which bounded through hoops, and pulled me down in the cage and grinned and snarled in my face, were as harmless as rabbits.

"Then Ottilia exhibited her horses in the arena, and people grew wild with excitement. I tell you, them horses could do everything but talk, and I often fancied they were trying their best to talk, too. But yet there were times, when the applause grew terrific, that I felt jealous of my wife. You see, she was so grandly beautiful that I suspected men applauded her more than her horses. And so it came to pass that I could not bear the sight of her in bare arms and silk tights, for men of ordinary flesh and blood could no more look calmly on her splendid proportions than water can prevent itself from running down-hill. So I made up my mind that Ottilia should wear a long riding-habit and a stove-pipe hat, and the manager and I quar

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ Letters seeking information replied to only through this department; no answers by mail.

INQUIRER READER, Baltimore.—"1. Have had an argument with a friend as to the nationality of Frederick Grant's grandson (Mrs. Sartoris' child). My friend contends that its being born in this country makes it American, and at maturity a citizen, without its father being naturalized. I claim, on the other side, that, its father being an Englishman, the child is or will be an English subject. Please decide who is right. 2. Also answer if a child born abroad of American parents is not an American according to a clause in our Constitution. 3. Or can the country in which it is born claim its allegiance as a subject, it being born of foreign parents?".....1. The child having been born here, he will, at thirty-five years of age, be eligible as the Presidency of the United States; or he may possibly become a subject of Great Britain, at his own election. Even should the father become naturalized, it is doubtful if the son, upon maturity, could not renounce his allegiance to the United States. Decisions based upon this point are conflicting. The official opinion of our Government in 1857 was that a naturalized citizen could do so, and the opinion of Secretary-of-State Seward in 1863 was that any citizen could do so. With respect to your claim, the citizenship of the father does not necessarily force citizenship upon the son. It is a peculiar case, and in the case that Great Britain loses as a citizen, according to the doctrine of this country, one who, had he been born in London of an American father temporarily residing there (as the child of Barrington Fielding here), would have been claimed by the United States as a citizen, and been accorded the right to sit in the Presidential chair. And yet, according to an English law that has scarcely been changed (a similar one was enacted here in 1832, and made perpetual in 1854), young Sartoris, by virtue of his father being English, is entitled to the right of a native of England. Had his mother alone been English, the son could simply acquire land in England by purchase or succession. 2. The Constitution does not fully cover citizenship in all its aspects. It has never been held that the child of a public minister, if born abroad of American parents, is a full American citizen; and under this view the late Gen. Geo. G. Meade of Philadelphia was nominated for the Presidency in the last decade, although he had been born in Spain. A child born abroad of American parents is an American provisionally only; and the nature of that provision appears in the following, furnished us by the State Department in March of 1873: "The courts have decided that a child born out of the United States is a citizen, if the father was one at the time of his birth; consequently, such male child is eligible to the Presidency of the United States (though, through the force of circumstances, he was born in a foreign country), the other requirements being filled." One of those requirements is that the parents' residence abroad shall not be permanent. 3. Under the general law as to aliens, the country in which the child is born can claim it as a subject. Whether it would do so now is a problem. Formerly, England held that no Englishman could forswear his crown—"once an Englishman, always an Englishman;" but that claim was abandoned some few years ago.

A. J. D., Philadelphia.—Neither is right, and it is a draw. The first swimming-machine, so far as Government records can show, was patented in England on June 24, 1755. The first patented in this country was that of J. J. Greenough of Wasliington, Feb. 21, 1843. The needle in combination with a shuttle was patented in England by Elias Howe & Gibbons on Dec. 7, 1844. On March 4, 1843, B. W. Bean of this city patented a machine for making the running or basting stitch. On March 21, 1848, Elias Howe, Jr., patented a machine, the chief merit of which was the lock-stitch. The shuttle and the feed of the Howe machine were improved by Blodgett & Lerow, and by Orson Lee of Boston, Mass., Oct. 2, 1849. Morey & Johnson secured a patent for their single-thread chain-stitch on Feb. 6, 1849; F. R. Robinson of Boston on Dec. 11, 1850, patented a machine that introduced the novelty of a back-stitch; Allen B. Wilson (of Wheeler & Wilson) secured patents in 1850 and on Aug. 12, 1851; Grover & Baker in 1851, 1852 and 1853; and Wilcox & Gibbs their chief one on June 2, 1857. Isaac Merritt Singer's machine, mainly designed for heavy work, was introduced in 1850. The hemmer, the most valuable of all the attachments, was patented by S. Calhoun of Feb. 18, 1856.

J. P.—1. The trotters named were foaled as follows: Thos Jefferson, 1853; smuggler, about 1866; Mambrino Gift, 1866; Jay Gould, 1867; Lula, about 1866; Nettie, American Girl, 1862; Lula, about 1866; Nettie, about 1867. 2. The best running time at the different distances named have been made as the ages followed: One mile, three years old; two miles, four years old; three miles, five years old; four miles, four years old. The question is really an unanswerable one, since the same horse that could beat another of like age two miles in 3:40 might not be able to run a mile except all alone, and one horse may not be as able as the other to carry weight for age. 3. Possibly you can procure Wilson Chapin's address of Rogers, Hall & Co., 310 in the middle of the street or the sidewalk, if both are paved. It is usual in this country to designate one as the street or road, and the other as the sidewalk. The latter word is admittedly the best. There are so many others of merit that it is but a matter of individual opinion who is second-best. 6. The age of J. B. Johnson the swimmer is about 26 years. 7. 1,483 is the highest recorded run at four-ball billiards.

M. L., Barnum's World's Fair.—We have neither inclination nor information on the subject. The Canadian race decision is right. In our answer to W. R., Dayton, in our issue of July 24 last, we stated: "The feat you describe was performed by Frederick Forster, of Boston, Mass., in Philadelphia since by James Melville, James Robinson, and others," and in our past issue we reiterated it in substance. This is vouched for by a veteran professional. We do not say that any of them performed it in a day, but we do say that when heavy for the carrying-act, the performer is compelled to wait until he can train another boy, unless he keeps one in practice at the time by providing the weight himself, which few care to do. If you will publish a challenge, you will probably be surprised at the number of professional equestrians who will accept it. We cannot undertake to search our files to give you dates and places where this feat has been performed. An offer of a wager in our advertising columns from you that it has never been accomplished will speedily settle the question.

IVAN O., London.—1. Your latest, dated July 29, did not reach our hands until Aug. 11; but we had already published the most important points in your previous letter. 2. The cutting and slashing referred to are done by the chief, who sees all that goes into the paper; so the blame, if there is any, must rest entirely upon his shoulders and not his associates. 3. Brevity, reliability, and the very latest news are what we want. Large as THE CLIPPER is, it would fail to hold one-quarter of the matter we receive, did we not make free use of "the butcher's cleaver" which, by the way, is not a cleaver, but a pruning-knife, which "Ivan Or!" to know.

FAIR PLAY, Savage.—"1. Two are playing cribbage. "A leads with a 9, B with a 10, A a four, B an ace, A a deuce, B a tray, and A a deuce. B claims a sequence of 1, 2, 3. A also makes a claim, saying it is a pair of 9's with sequence. B disputes A's claim. I think I have read your decision that A is right. Am I right? 2 A plays a four, B a five, A a tray, and B a five. Here the same difficulty occurs. A says he makes a sequence, and that B cannot. I say that B is entitled to it also. Am I not right again?".....1. B's score is 1, 2, 3, 4 instead of 1, 2, 3. A takes two points for the 31 only. 2. No. B's first 5 stops the sequence.

CALDEUS, Stroudsburg.—"In a game of baseball, batter makes a short hit; ground-ball; batter reaches first and proceeds around to return to first when he discovers ball to have been thrown over baseman's head, and starts for 2d without returning to touch first base. Ball is thrown to 2d and is declared out on account of not returning and touching first before proceeding to 2d. Is umpire right?".....The decision was in violation of the rules, as the base-runner has a right to run for second if the ball be returned to retouch the base. He only forfeits exemption from being put out in so returning by his effort to run to second base.

T. St. Stephens—"One man is out, A on second, B on first, C at the bat; C knocks a fly to second and is caught out; A has not time to return to base, and is out; he is the third hand out. Next inning—B, being next in order as striker, makes a muff, but an objection is raised by the opposing captain. The umpire decides in his favor. Who is right, the umpire or B?".....The player who is next in order on the list of strikers on the side is entitled to take the striker in the ensuing inning. The rule is so plain that we cannot see how it can be mistaken.

TYRRHOE, Washington.—1. The Prussian needle gun, it is claimed, was invented forty-six years ago, though not generally adopted by Prussia until that country's war with Denmark. It was converted into a breech-loader in 1836, and the first Prussian musket was made in 1841 at the town of Mantenffel, about 1846. The invention has, of course, been claimed by various persons and different nations, and the gun itself has been modified in various ways, especially of late. Capt. Barclay began his 1,000-mile walk on June 1, and ended on July 12, 1809.

UNKTOMI, Louisville.—"The side at the bat has lost two hands, and has a man on third base; batter hits to short, who fumbles the ball, but manages to get it to first in time to put batter out; meanwhile, man on third tallies and before third and is home. Is the run scored?".....Certainly not. Under no circumstances can the run count if the striker is put out before reaching first base; either when two hands are out at the time, or a double play makes the striker third hand out.

BILLIARDS.—"A bets B that Garnier in a match with Daly can't pocket 300 balls in succession in a game, and who wins?".....Garnier has never run 113 in a match, strictly speaking. On the afternoon of June 26, 1873, at Spring Hall, in this city, he ran 113 in the 23d inning of his first game with Daly, and ended that game in the 25th inning. A tournament game is not a match, however, and that was a tournament game.

HORSE.—1. The Searcher, now called Leander. 2. Longfellow's alleged time for a mile in the Saratoga Cup race of 1872 is not a record. 3. Tom Bowling's best mile record—1:41¾—was made at Buffalo, Aug. 7, 1874. A wins. One beating is at the rate of four to one; the other, at but two to one.

PYTHIAS, Erie.—It depends upon at what stage of the game the bet was laid. We assume that it was made before the game began, or early during it. In that case the party knew who was-or-not that the Eries would make four runs, notwithstanding that game was called at end of seventh inning because of rain.

D. H., Hoboken.—Mr. Robert Van Buren, assistant engineer, Department of City Works, Brooklyn, courteously answers: "The largest outlet or main sewer now built in this city is equal in area to a circular sewer of 120-inch diameter. We clean them by areas compared with circular sewers." It is of peculiar shape.

T. CLAYBURG, Montreal.—"I was not, either there or anywhere else. 2. Capt. Barclay's feat of walking 1,000 miles in as many hours, back and forth over a measured mile on the public road at Newmarket, Eng., is the greatest pedestrian feat of endurance on record.

J. M. G., St. Louis.—We conceive that the gist of the bet was, that the Athletics would show to more advantage in playing with the Browns than with the Chicagos. The result proves it to be so. The fact that the Athletics did not beat either club only makes it all the worse for B. G. wins.

BASEBALL, Cincinnati.—A wins. The score had to be either 15 to 0 (in favor of the rising club), or 5 (forfeited game) in favor of the home club. Neither way could there be 20 runs. It was not essential to the bet that nine full innings should be played.

WARREN, Providence, R. I.—Yes; in 1869.

AN OLD READER, Yarmouth.—1. If the language was "a wrong," A loses; if it was "was wrong," it is a draw, as one has the wrong, and the other right. 2. This is a draw, the bet not specifying which wrong and which right.

WARREN HALL, Boston Highlands.—1. The game rules govern the referee in the case of the pocket. 2. If a player jumps his ball off the table, he loses three points in the four-ball game, and forfeits his play; in the three-ball game there is no penalty.

E. R., Bethlehem.—"Can a man attending a college at the town in which he resides legally play with both the college and town nines during spring term—base as well as in vacation?".....Yes; if the town club is its "home" club—not otherwise.

C. E., Middleton.—The Great Eastern is generally said to be 680ft. long, 83½ft. beam, and 58ft. deep. She is not a rigger, and may be a trifle smaller, as the original plans were departed from slightly in building her.

HORSE.—1. Dexter's time, 2:17¼; Goldsmith Maid's, 2:14. Dexter's time is of but little account now, having been beaten frequently, and by four different horses. 2. Myrtle Park, Boston, Sept. 2, 1874, the Maid's 2:14 was made. 3. Private time is of no value—it may as well be given out 2:09 as 2:14.

OLYMPIC, Paterson.—"A man is on first base, and one at the bat. The runner starts for second as the pitcher delivers the ball. The batter hits between first and second, and the ball strikes the base-runner, who does not see it until it hits him. Is the runner out?".....Yes.

NO SIGNATURE, Schenectady.—If the horse that A bets on is one of those that made a dead heat, the bet is a draw. Otherwise, A loses. This is on general principles. It is possible for A to lose money in an extreme case. State the actual affair, and especially if it was a running race.

H. U., Philla.—The heavy won nothing but the first heat, and he won that only through a concession. It was a pacing race, not a trotting. It is true that a pacer that trots has, on general principles, the worst of it; but these were probably green pacers.

H. S. A., Baltimore.—1. The Oregon. C. Vanderbilt, Alida, Mary Powell and several other steamboats have covered twenty-five miles in an hour. 2. If there is wind enough, a sailboat sixteen feet long will go either twelve miles an hour or to the bottom.

NO SIGNATURE.—1. We know nothing of his responsibility, save that he has always dealt squarely with us. 2. We never saw that letter used. It must be a misprint. If L, it would mean left. R., right; D in F, door in flat, etc. 3. From $100 to $150 per week.

J. D. M., Brockville.—We never heard of it until your letter was received, and therefore can say nothing as to its genuine or not. If you are in doubt, give yourself the benefit of the doubt.

H. W., Long Island.—1. A loses. 2. The Chicago Club was the only one of the championship contestants not "Chicagoed" in 1874. On May 13 of that year they "Chicagoed" the Athletics—and not the Athletics them—by 4 to 0.

C. L. S., Athens.—Goldsmith Maid made the fastest heat on record at Rochester, Aug. 12, 1874—a second heat in 2:14¾. Her 2:14 was not made in a race of heats. The 2:15¾ you refer to was made at Buffalo, Aug. 7, 1874.

CONSTANT READER, Richmond.—1. A loses. 2. It is a draw, if the bet was not specifically made play-or-pay. 3. Beats us. Write to the agent. 4. Yes.

A. B. C. Quincy.—1. No. 2. It is fair. 3. Yes. 4. Yes; of Ed. James, as per his advertisement in our sporting columns. 5. Three unfair balls must be delivered, but not necessarily in succession, before one can be called.

T. B., Chester.—If a game of nine innings was specified, the tenth inning was not to be counted, and any number of innings under nine would have vitiated the bet. The score at end of ninth inning decides it.

CRINKAGE.—"J leads off with a four, C follows with a tray, J with a six covering the four. C plays a five and claims a sequence. Can he do it? I say the run or sequence should be 3, 5, 6."..... C is right.

JUNO, Washington.—1. Booth's Theatre will seat 1,807 persons. 2. 6, 7, 8, and a pair of aces compose what is known in cribbage as "the regular thirteen"—viz—eight by 15's, two for a pair, and a run of three.

PAUL CLIFFORD, Chicago.—1. Henry N. Smith owns Goldsmith Maid. 2. Theodore Tilton is not a minister. 3. Henry Ward Beecher was born June 24, 1813. 4. Are not at liberty to say.

J. P., Sparrowville.—The same thing has been suggested before, and many other plans have been submitted, but without avail. The younger members of the profession are not interested in it, and will do nothing.

J. R. B., Sanford.—1. You can get a chart of ferrets for $25. Terriers command from $5 to $500 apiece. 2. Address Ed. James, as per his business card in another column, for his work on terrier dogs, as to handling, etc.

ADAM.—B, having said that he made it diamonds, which suit had just been turned down, exhausted his right to the marking. He could not go back to hearts, unless with the consent of all the other players.

J. N. O., Providence.—1. We know of no one who keeps it on sale. Performers superintend the manufacture of their own. An advertisement might procure you a second-hand set of apparatus.

G. H. TAYLOR.—"At cribbage, A plays a four, B a jack, A a trey, B a jack.—Is B entitled to a run of three?".....No.

H. W., Hartford.—1 and 2. Roby, 51 Ann street, New York. 3. The best running high jump on record is 5ft. 11in. 4. There was no regular championship before 1871.

J. M. C., Binghamton.—1. He is still the best on record. 2. It was an advertising dodge, both men being engaged with the same circus.

JOE.—No. They are distinct dramatizations of Jules Verne's novel. The plot will be almost the same in each version.

G. L. P., Philadelphia.—His name is S. C. France, and his play is called "Marked for Life;" he is now in this city, and can be addressed at the Police Office.

MISS L. R., Ann Arbor.—No answers by mail. Address a letter to any person with that show, in care of this office, and it will be forwarded.

MISS M. B.—They do not add to their company thus late in the season. Take our advice, and remain where you are, and thus avoid late alterations.

W. G., Philadelphia.—Send to Col. T. Allston Brown, as per his advertisement, for a copy of his Showman's Guide, price $1.

SPINKS.—There is no legal objection to anyone using that title, but professional courtesy would suggest the selection of another name.

PATSY.—B is right in giving up the money. Fulton's score at Dollymount was 161 (at Creedmoor 171); Johnson's at Dollymount was 162 (at Creedmoor 150).

NIAGARA.—See answer to "J. B. H."

R. R., Lebanon.—Certainly he can.

C. C., Ottawa.—$60 called the boots.

J. J. L.—5 to 2 is best.

TRULY, this is a great vegetable season. Why, even the streets of the metropolis show it to be a cab-age.

"THE LAMBS" may not be displeased to learn that Superintendent Folk of the Brooklyn police has been dismissed "for cause." Folk is the man who, as inspector some years ago, used to turn up at prize-fights just at the wrong time; and the result was, the boys had to forego the recreation promised on their "moonlight excursions." Had he attended to his duties on all occasions, and with the same energy as he exhibited in his pursuit of "the lambs," he might be "It" for years to come. His illustrious predecessor Campbell is his immediate successor.

GENTLEMEN who do a little faro now and then are becoming disgusted with the way things are going in this city. Not alone are the big banks driven to the wall by the myrmidons, but the minutest skin-game is squelched by the interference of the lynx-eyed ones. Whither are we drifting now? What with the suppression of concert-dives, the wiping-out of faro, the shutting-up of panel-houses, and the "giving-away" of police officials, the metropolis is no longer like herself.

IT IS QUITE LIKELY that next Fall will witness a very spirited political campaign in this city. Tammany seems to be in the throes of despair, and, should she persist in throwing overboard the braves she has selected for the sacrifice, somebody will howl. With two Tammany councils in session, and all the big and little Indians in full war paint and feathers, won't there be a lively chance of a ruction "when Johnny comes marching home?"

AN ENTERPRISING young man has got himself into trouble and the Tombs by trying to swindle several banks on forged bills for jewelry. Writing to a confederate, he says: O pal, a car-bunk'll make any man cross that has to-pas a night in it, and I'me in d-urance vile, which is worse. My journey was onyx-pected; but, as it was for profit, I bear all my troubles with a sardonyx smile.

SWIM OUT.—Desirous of eclipsing the aquatic performance of Capt. Paul Boynton, Capt. Webb under took to swim across the English Channel, minus a submarine armor; but, after having remained in the water several hours, and failing to make much headway, the swimmer was taken on board the vessel that kept him company, and Webb footed it back.

FAST TIME.—At Rochester, N. Y., on Saturday last, Lula defeated Goldsmith Maid, the latter winning the first heat, and Lula the three following heats, being the best four consecutive heats on record! Verily, this is another "heated term."

IN A FEW DAYS the American rifle team will be here, where a glorious reception awaits them. "Our Jim" says that Dick Turpin used to rifle teams, long ago, and there wasn't this row about it.

MIGHT NOT the killing of sleeping-car passengers be headed "Berths and Deaths?"

ANTI-IMBIBERS declare that this should no longer be called the "Temperate Zone!"

NEWS OF THE WEEK BOILED DOWN.

☞ Aug. 9: E. Delafield Smith was yesterday removed from the office of Corporation Counsel in this city by Mayor Whitney being appointed to succeed him.....Ex-State-treasurer Parker of South Carolina was recaptured, and placed in the bonds to be taken to Columbia.....$1,000 of the $47,000 stolen from the Treasury Department was reported to have been recovered, and Ottiman, the suspected party, was held in $10,000 bail.....The trial of the Tichborne claimant was proceeding against the Collies in London, Eng., were suspended for a month, on account of the absconding of Alexander, their chief counsel.....A warrant was issued, and the counsel for the defense announced the withdrawal of the case; that the Herzegovinian insurgents defeated the Turks in several encounters, and wounded Selim Pasha; that the Count de See de Vallon, the French Minister, was suspended, the Alfonsists awaiting the arrival of heavy guns; that Sir Charles Adderley's shipping bill passed its second reading in the House of Lords; that the Cretan insurgents, many of them badly hurt, were remanded to jail in Glasgow, Scotland.....Charles H. E. F.—At two-handed cribbage, A plays a six, B an eight, A a four, B a seven, A a five, and claims 5 for a sequence. Is he right?".....Yes.

ENOCH, Pittsburg.—The Empire Seward hails from New Haven, Ct. 2. We never heard of his having made such time. 3. No. 4. Crandall is generally so considered.

H. P., Bethlehem.—1. The rules require that a sound fowl shall allow a blinker four ounces.

G. W. B., Avenue Theatre.—As we understand the matter, the decision indorsed is correct.

RAT.—Hunt has only made the three he gave, is out on his high B, with his jack, loses.

E. B., Danbury.—Goldsmith Maid's fastest three heats are 2:19¾, 2:19¾, 2:16.

H. ARNOLD.—The match was won by Bogardus. See notice elsewhere.

ANDREW J. GILLEN.—It was entirely optional with the starter.

G. M. C., Reading.—Of Stephen Roberts, 368 South street, this city.

P. F., Philadelphia.—It is probably pure fiction. But why not yourself write to No. 16 Dey street?

I. S. E. C.—The depot for C. F. Martin & Co.'s guitars is at C. A. Zoebisch & Son's, 46 Maiden lane, N. Y.

J. L. S., Syracuse.—If a horse bet only in a trot does not start, the bet is a draw. Straights are sometimes played to beat two pair only, and sometimes to beat three of a kind.

LINWOOD OLIO CONCERT CO., Princeton.—Shannon, Miller & Crane, who appeared in Cincinnati on Feb. 16, 1856.

BIG CASSINO.—A could claim the game. It was not necessary to play further.

H. J. C., Ex-Cambridge.—"Give one, give all," has been the rule ever since Adam first played seven-up.

L. B., St. Johnsonville.—About $2,000. You would have to get an aeronaut to superintend the ascension.

INQUIRER, Hamilton.—Tom Taylor is the author of "Our American Cousin."

W. J. C., Mineral Point.—Question mislaid. Please repeat it.

R. L. C., Newport.—It would not look well in print, and we can do you the greater favor by not publishing it.

J. F. S., Hunterstand.—They will not be completed before September.

J. L., Brockport.—A man can win on "received news," provided it has been so declared in the newspaper.

HIRSUTE.—It is pretty certain to injure the skin. We know of nothing that we would care to recommend.

R. K.—The referee's decision is correct. It was a draw of the bet, unless the parties agree upon someone else.

W. A. H., Galveston.—We do not keep a record of such races.

A. C., Cincinnati.—A loses. His club had to make two runs at least. This is our rule.

S. F., Henderson.—At the beginning of 1874, the German army consisted of 31,830 officers and 1,320,000 men.

J. C., Washington.—The decision was correct. See reply to "Uretuber."

C. R. L., Toledo.—Such transfers create confusion. You had better not.

P. S. J., St. Louis.—Never saw him pitch, and cannot say.

JNO. AND E. J.—1. The Athletics held it in 1871. 2. Yes.

W. B., York.—A second-rate bat; too heavy for an active fielder; a fair bowler.

J. E. B., Columbia.—1. Yes; in 1869. 2. It is Grifin and Rice. See Variety Summary.

MISS E. G., Whitehall.—No answers by mail. It is not the same person.

A. M. F., Chicago.—Letters in care of this office will reach her. We know of no other way.

H. M.—"Helen's Triumph" commenced in THE CLIPPER dated Aug. 22, 1874.

WILL AND TOM, Pittsburg.—Tom loses. Goldsmith Maid was once owned by Alden Goldsmith.

HOP, Hartford.—Any score of six or under made you winner.

D. A. C., Philadelphia.—No such advertisement has appeared in THE CLIPPER.

BUSY BEE, Philadelphia.—1. He is. They were married Aug. 28, 1862. 2. He name is Rosabel. She is a brunette.

C. P., Boston.—Pedestrianism was at 1 to 0. Nevertheless, A loses, as a score of 1 to 0 is not 2 to 1.

B. L.—The side that made the two runs in the last inning won the game.

SPORT, Edinburg.—Red Cloud made a dead heat with Gloster in 2:18, at Rochester, Aug. 14, 1874.

CASSINO, Phila.—The pile is "nines," and neither B nor A can make anything else.

PITTSBURG.—Never saw him pitch, and therefore cannot say.

C. H. B., Paterson.—1. At Peck & Snyder's—see advertisement—if anywhere. 2. Cannot tell you.

WASHINGTON, Baltimore.—It was a dead ball, as it struck the batsman's person.

AMATEUR.—The striker is out for hindering or obstructing the catcher.

W. T. S., Trenton.—Both men out, one on the fly—ball momentarily held—and the other in returning to first base.

JUNIUS B. B. P.—1. He was out—the base-bag is the base, not the stake. 2. Yes; all he can make, at his risk.

C. E. P., East Cambridge.—1. The late Elias Logan. 2. $3. It can be obtained of him at his dramatic agency.

H. B. P., Portsmouth.—1. We presume so. 2. He can be addressed in care of this office.

THOS. COYLE of Chester, Pa., attempted on the 10th inst. to swim over the same course as his contest with S. S. Johnson, viz., from Chester to Gloucester, on the Delaware. He entered the water at 3:15 P. M., and, after swimming about eight miles in two hours and a half, he was not obliged to stop. The following day, Johnson undertook the same feat, for a wager of $100, 'tis said; but after swimming about ten miles he, like Coyle, became so chilly and benumbed with the coldness of the water, that he was obliged to succumb. The 21st inst. has been selected by Johnson as the day on which he will again attempt the feat of swimming from Chester to Gloucester. The second match between him and Coyle has been set down for the 28th inst.

A FOUR-OARED RACE between employes of wholesale fish dealers in Boston, representing seven of the leading firms in Commercial wharf, came off on Friday evening, Aug. 13. The course was from the end of Long wharf to Lewis wharf, 1¼ miles, and prizes of $50, $30 and $20 were hung up. The...liam Fryor crew—F. B. Rich (bow), Frank Goodspeed, ...Sullivan, Jr., and Miller Lord—rowed splendidly, leading and retained it throughout the race, completing the distance in 15:45; Brown & Searey second in 16:00; ...skins third, 16:15; Coleman, Bunting & Emery, Baker ...ffherall, and Stone & Richards well behind. Judges—...M. Haskins, George Richards, Dyer O'Brien and Joseph ...ewart. Starter and referee, John W. Frazer.

THREE SWIMMING CONTESTS came off in the East River, near the baths at Fifty-ninth street, on Saturday afternoon, Aug. 14. The first event was a race of about a mile and a quarter, with the tide, for a gold medal, which was won by E. Schoenberg, in 12:22; Wm. Foster second, F. Seyfert third, and M. Mayer fourth. A boys' race, from the rocks below Blackwell's Island to the bath, followed, with six starters, of whom Chas. Foster won easily in 7:09; ...Isenberg second, Thos. Noonan and Gus May even-up third place. The last race was between girls, four of them took part, viz., Lena Sands, B. Well, F. Kraus, and ...Sneider; distance, about 100 yards. Lena won in 2:12; ...s Kraus second, and Miss Sneider third.

THREE BOAT RACES between the crews of the N. Y. Yacht Club fleet enlivened matters at Newport, R. I., Aug. 13. ...ween the yachtsmen indulged in a resting-spell. The first ...ncest was four-oared boats, and was won by the Dreadnaught boys, beating crews from the Mohawk, Alarm, and Idler. The pair-oared race was taken by the Idler crew. ...e other contestants representing the Foam, Addie Voorhis, Restless, Mohawk, and Estelle. The foam sculler came in first in the singles, laying out men from the Dreadnaught, Genia, Active, and Restless. Messrs. Krebs and ...ll had the conduct of affairs.

A SWEEPSTAKES of $25 was sailed for by the yachts Witch of the Wave, Captain Edward Davis, and the Mary Jane, captain Howard Davis, at Washington, D. C., Aug. 12. The Columbia was also entered, but did not make her appearance, thereby forfeiting her entrance. The course was from the Seventh-street ferry wharf to Fort Washington and return, and the race was won by the Witch by about two miles.

THE SENIOR SCULLERS' RACE for the championship of the Crescent Boat Club was pulled over the two-mile turning course on the Charles River, at Boston, Mass., Aug. 13. The contestants were Messrs. Sheridan, Charles Sleeth, H. Pierce and F. Downing. They pulled in seventeen-foot boats, and Downing won in 16:38; Pierce second, half a length before Sheridan. Judges—Messrs. Butler, T. Fulton and J. Tynan. Referee, C. Bunten.

A DOUBLE-SCULL RACE of an impromptu character came off on the Harlem River, over the three-mile course from the lumber dock to Morrisania, on Saturday afternoon, Aug. 14, the contestants being Chas. D. Hammond and Wm. ...Moore, on one side, and J. B. Derrickson and Frank ...urgeon on the other. The former couple led almost from the start, and won by some half-dozen lengths in 24:45.

THE VESPER ROWING ASSOCIATION of Yonkers, N. Y., held a meeting Aug. 10, at which it was decided not to row their annual barge race with the Palisades this year. This is a great disappointment to the Palisades, who it will be remembered defeated the Vespers last year, though the latter rung in a "skiff" barge on them.

JAMES LYON AND NAT LANAGAN won $50 by defeating J. ...Mullen and W. J. Dorgan in a three-mile double-scull working-boat race from Lewis wharf, Boston, around buoy and back, Aug. 13. They won by several lengths in 25:30. Judges, T. C. Buckley and J. Joyce. Referee, starter and timekeeper, Charles Robinson.

A SCRUB RACE between the members of the Palisade Boat Club of Yonkers, N. Y., manning the eight-oared barge Keonine and the six-oared shell Old Fred, came off

THE COUNTRY MANAGER'S EXPERIENCE

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Did you ever go out on a country trip
To make your Summer's expenses,
While the theatre is closed, and you've nothing to do
But to keep out the wolf till the season commences?
When you go to the train, of course it's but right
To hand over "comps" to the baggage man quickly;
'Tis done to save extras—he puts it on light!
At least, so he says—but he piles it on thickly.
Then the train-boy comes. He wants a pass,
And is followed by brakeman and porter,
You have to shell out, or "you're no man at all;"
They show you no pity, no quarter.
You get to the town. The buss-man you give
A pass—to pay he cannot afford;
Then comes the Mayor—for the license he'll take
Twenty tickets for Council and Board;
Five dollars a night, besides, he must have;
And the Board—honest, free from all vice—
Are out on the street, selling "comps" to the boys
For half of your regular price;
Then comes the "proprietor" of your queer hall—
He wants to pass in his sons and his wife;
Besides, he must have all his rent in advance—
That's the way he has done all his life;
Next is the janitor—he wants an order,
And every musician wants two.
Some man loans a broom—he'll take a couple,
And the landlord will ask for a few.
Then the waiter-girls come—they must all go;
And the telegraph office, they send up for three.
The boy with the order, he wants one for coming,
And a note from the printer says "Send some to me."
Then the billposter must have fifteen for the boards,
And that will not half the order fill.
Then the carter of baggage he asks for a couple,
As he quietly hands you his bill.
Then the hotel-clerk—why, he must go too,
And bring in the hall-boys and cooks,
And he sends up to have the board paid in advance,
As he wishes to settle his books.
Then, just as the doors are about to open,
The rain comes down like a splash—
The deadheads are there; but when you count up,
You've just got nine dollars in cash.
Your deadheads are sorry—you struck a bad time—
You should come six months before, my lad.
A strawberry festival last Fourth of July
Cleaned out the boys, you know, "pooty bad."

Take my advice, all you innocent ones,
And don't try the country for cash.
Rather stay in the city and sweiter to death,
Than have to endure such a smash! ED. MARBLE.

IDESHOW BILL BEFORE THE QUEEN.

As Related by Himself.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY CHARLES H. DAY.

"That was a long trip, and we were out moren seven years before we fetched up in New York again. The show was purty light-waisted to start out with. One of the nigger singers played the 'What Is It,' and I used to slide around myself and paint up for a cannibal. I made a purty tolerable man-eater, and had a little experience that way a-chawing on a feller's ear in a 'clem' oncet.

"Our main reliance at first was the splendidest barril organ I ever herd played. Talk about Gilmore at the Jubilee! He mounted it right on to a hunsh next to nothing long side this orgin. It was the easiest running thing that was ever turned with a handle. In Havanny we wur playing against the Italian operey, and beat them all holler. The Governor-general says to me:

"'That orgin is far superior to the orchestra up at the grand oprey.' Bizness was immense in Havanny, but that nigger singer came near spileing the whole trick by refusing to go on as the 'What Is It;' but the old man just settled that by coming in and convincing him with an iron-headed stake. I'm yer, there's a heap of convincement in a club what's got an iron ring on to the head of it.

"Says I at the time, 'What difference can it make to a feller that blacks himself up as a nigger, to play hisself as an ijiot?' There was a considerable feeling at that time ag'in Yankees, an' I b'leve, if it hadn't been for the American Consul, that show would 'a' been declared. You see, when the main guy, the Governor-general, came down to the show one night, says I to him 'Gov.,' and says he to me 'Bill,' an' hands me a cheroot, 'this war atween Spain an' the United States has got to be prevented.' Then I just took the cue, and went on explain to him that if war was brought on of a sudden, it would bust up the show and lead to foreign complications. The 'What Is It' would claim the protection of Liberia. The cannibal was a native of Fiji and a furiner, and Dutch Jake, who ground the organ, would call on Germany—there'd be a row for dam sure all round. Europe, Africa and America would be involved in war all at one time. The Gov. thanked me, and said that as a diplomatist I'd have made my mark in the world, and he'd thought so if he heered me 'platt' of a time to get a license reduced.

"We went from Havanny to the City of Mexico, an' there a Circassian girl joined us. She left Circashy at a very early age, and went to work in a New York dollar-store. Bizness was immense. The boss and a hired man didn't do anything but nail up Mexican dollars in kegs, an' ship them home. But, just our luck, we had to quit; they gin us permission to git. I'd been making love to one of the ticket-fambilies that kicked up a row—and then we were creating a panic by shipping all the money out of the country; it was effecting finances abroad, and Rothschilds—old Roth himself—he writ over to find out what was the matter.

"We hadn't been in London moren a week before the Queen she invited us up to Windsor Castle. We went, an' she an' the young 'uns were mighty tickled with the show. I jest spread myself on that occasion. Sez I, kinder familiar like, to her 'royal nibs,' resting one hand on her shoulder:

"'Vic, let me interduce you to Miss Aramella Ludovico Serenia, which is the Circash for 'hair stand up in the air.' This virgin was sold at the age of sixteen to the Sultan of Turkey by her cruel parients—he took his pay in turkeys. After being confined in his harem for five years she escaped, and claimed the protection of the American Consul, who was my brother-in-law. She acquired a knowledge of the English language by reading the advertisements in The London Times, after which she set sail for America and fulfilled a highly successful engagement as star bartender in a New York dollar-store. Her hand has been sought in vain, among others by the Governor of New Jersey, which honor she declined, not desiring to form any foreign alliances.'

"'Edward Albert hadn't hitched at that time, an' as I was talking I seed that he was throwing sheep's eyes at the gal, an' so did his ma.

"'Don't mind it, Vic,' says I; 'it's so nat'ral; you know how it is yourself,' and then I turns around to Edward Albert, and says I: 'It's no use, Ed, a sparkin up to the Circash; your ma has got her mind sot on your tieing up to a Dutch vrow.' That made Vic snicker, and says she 'Wegates,' an' says I 'Fah,' as that was all the Dutch I knew, except lager and bologna.

"I forgot to mention that we 'increased the attraction,' as the small bills said, by engaging a skeleton and a fat woman. They were the lovingest couple you ever see in your life. He was as thin as a rail, six foot high, and weighed sixty-one pounds. She weighed eight hundred and ninety on the right kind of scales, an' if they owned anything else. They were the lovingest pair I ever set eyes on; he'd set from morning till night and hold her in his lap, an' call her 'baby,' and 'sugar-plum' and 'sweetness,' just like two turtle doves a-cooing.

"'Mrs. Victory, Mr. Prints of the boss fish and the royal family' in general,' says I, scraping a bow, 'I have the pleasure of interducing to you Mr. and Mrs. Jehu Gosh, two of the greatest wonders of the world—next to yerself, madame,' says I, dropping a compliment. 'Bully for you, Bill!' says she, nudging the Prints, an' I resoomed: Mr. Gosh is forty-five years old, and weighs but sixty-one pounds.' That's so too like I'm a living interpreter, which was a purty good joke for her nibs. 'That's one for you,' says I, an' then I went on. 'His hide is like parchment, an' when he cashes in his checks the old woman is going to skin him an' sell his hide for drum-heads.' Then, turning to the fat woman, I resoomed: 'Eva' was a name that was for a woman of her figur—'weighs eight hundred and ninety pounds, to say nothing of the ounces. There's no need of being particular to a hair. As for her age, as being a woman, an', like yourself, old gal, getting along somewhat in years, we'll omit the statistics.'

"Vic was a little ruffled like when I touched her up on her age, but I brought her round in a minute, saying: 'Beg pardon; never mind me—we are both married folks.'

"It aint much that you can say that's edifying about skeletons and fat women—they seem to speak for themselves. The boss trotted in the 'What Is It,' an' ses he in a whisper: 'Bill, sling yourself;' but here was no necessity for doing that.

"'Allow me to invite your attention, may it please our most gracious majesty, to the main guy of the akement, to the most wonderfulest curiosity as ever was. We don't know 'What Is It,' an' that is for the reason we ask the conundrum, an' everyone gives it up. At an early age he was engaged upon the editorial staff of The Tribune; but, having offended Mr. Greeley, went to live in the country along with his uncle, William Lloyd Garrison.' There was a good opportunity to give the tiger singer a kick then and out, an' says I: 'The strangest physical development of this critter is, that its modicum of brains seems to rest entirely in its heels. He is constantly laboring under the impression that he is the whole show, and that it couldn't possibly go on without him. In interlect he is skercely elevated to the level of the brute, and makes known his wants for food and drink by calls for 'budge' and 'peck.' He is a conceited wretch, your majesty, an' I'll warrant he's stagging your nibs for a muck this very minit.' If you ever see a nigger singer hot, he was one; an' he hadn't no sooner got ont of the castle, than he turns his paper collar an' went an' paid his wash-bill, jest to spite hisself.

"I excused the cannibal to Vic, remarking that 'As he was dressed in the Summer Fiji costume, he was hardly presentable to the royal family; and although he had been presented with no end of tracks especially prepared for the heathen, he had not as yet been converted to wear even as much as a linen duster.'

"Vic took such a liking to me that she asked me to stay to supper; an' after we'd finished that, she sent around the corner for a tin-pail full of beer, and we sot there and talked and talked until it was time for the young 'uns to go to bed. I tried to excuse myself, but she wouldn't have it, but insisted on my waiting for the old man to come in. I suppose that Al. was out house-hunting, or down to the intelligence office looking for a hired girl.

"As I said there we sot waiting, her nibs asked me lots of questions about the States. Wanted to know if I was acquainted with Mr. Washington. I told her that George was starring it before I got into the business. Then she spoke of the Derby, and inquired what was the fastest time made on record in America, and I told her 'by the red-coats, when they run down Bunker Hill.'

"I thought Vic would get riled, but she laughed like all posset; an', sez she, slapping me on the shoulder, 'Bully for you!'

"Seeing how I had made so favorable an impression on the Queen, I made bold to make her a proper petition. And that was a speculation—talk about Barnum's Jenny Lind!

"'Vic,' says I, 'now I've got the smartest speculation on top of the earth, an' I'll go halves with you, an' it's not every one that would be letting you into such a snap; but I've kinder taking a likin to you, an' would do most anything in the world to help you along. Now, you see, we aint had no live princes and queen's young uns over cross the pond in some time. Now, let me take your kids t'other side the drink, an' combine 'em with this sideshow, an' we'll coin money. I tell you it'll just bag 'em.'

"Just then a brilliant idea struck me, an' says I:

"'It would be a big thing, I tell you, Vic., if you'd just lend me your Sunday crown for Mrs. Gosh. You could write a letter, sayin' that it was the genywin article. It would be mighty becomin' to her; an' you could give her a lot of your second-hand dress-parade clothes, and I'd announce it on the bills as 'Miss John Gosh as Queen Victorey, with real clothes and real crown.'"

"'I see.' She kinder hesitated, so I put in:

"'Oh! you needn't be afraid but what I'd be on the square. You'd be smacks on the receipts; and if you wanted, you could send one of your lords over to tend door; that would be an outside attraction which 'Doc' Jones could work up in the dodgers.'

"I was just going to tell her I'd bill and work up the snap with big streamer—'The Royal Family'—with picter bills underneath as large as life and twice as natural, when Al. come in. He felt mightily disappointed in missing the show. I wasn't quite so familiar like with Vic. after Al. came in, for I didn't want to cause any jealousy in the family.

"It was getting late, an' I thought it about time for me to be a-going; so I just hinted that a servant might run out and get me a carriage, when Al. jumped up and run around to the barn, and harnessed up a four-in-hand and driv around to the door, and I hopped in.

"'Good-bye, Bill,' says the Queen.

"'Good-bye, Vic,' says I; 'good-bye. Any time you are down-town, don't forget to run in and see me. I'm always to home.' 'You'd welcome as the flowers in May.

"You'd oughter seen me in that gilded kerridge—carved and figery fied just like a circus chariot; there I was, laying off like a ten-dollar-a-week drygoods clerk going to Jerome Park, with Al. on the box putting on the gad. You'd orter seen their eyes stick out when we rolled up to the hotel. I wanted Al. to come in and l'ist, so that I could show him off to the gang, but he begged to be excused on account of the bosses being restive.

"'Bill,' says he, as he druv off, 'come round to the castle any time you feel like it—the old woman will be glad to see you.'

"'Give my respects to Vic.,' says I, loud enouch for all to hear. 'I'll be up to-morrow afternoon, and we'll have some beer.'

"The next morning there was a lackey come down to the hotel and brought me a decoration, as they called it. It was about the size of a cheese. In the centre was a diamond which weighed moren a pound. Around the rim was first, a row of solitaire diamonds, every one of them as big as a peach; second, a row of emeralds; third, a row of rubies; fourth, a row of pearls; fifth, a row of opals; sixth, a row of sapphires; and then, wherever there was a bare spot, they'd thrown in a diamond.

"It was a splendid thing. I hadn't had it a week before the nigger singer wanted to borrow it to wear for a breastpin to a ball. It wasn't so much the vally of it that made me set store on it as it was the inscription that was written on a gold plate on it, in big letters. It read:

"'From Al. and Vic. to Bill. When shall we three meet again?'"

BUNKER

AS A "TEMPLE OF TEMPERANCE."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Bunker, the diminutive of whose prenomen was 'Bob," emerged from his domicile the next morning at nine o'clock or thereabouts.

To eyes accustomed to noting the effects of a night's debauch, Bunker was betrayed by his face, which "talked right out" to that effect—debauch.

He walked down the block in which was his domicile, crossed the transverse street, and proceeded along the next block, on the lower corner of which was a drinking-saloon of no mean pretensions, judging from the plate-glass window, elaborately "dressed" with bottles of the champagne and other varieties, brilliantly painted glass signs (brewers' and liquor-dealers' cards), cigar boxes, et cætera, against the background of a green screen, and a curtain of blue, with a gilt hand, drawn half way up.

Bunker's favorite "stopping place" morning and evening, his "anchorage ground" after nightfall, and to which he had not given the go-by for three years and over.

Would he "skip the gutter," so to speak, this morning? There must be a first time for everything—would he omit entering for the first time, now? He looks towards the place, and, we fancy, wistfully. Ha! he looks straight forward now, and quickens his step. Yes, he gives it the "go-by," crosses the street and gains the opposite corner! It was a victory. Bunker, boy, the moral victory—not gained without a struggle, but gained.

What's this? He stops; his hand goes to his moustache, and his head drops, as if he had forgotten something, and was debating whether to turn back or not.

Bunker remarks loquitur: "Damme, you might have dropped in and seen Tom—needn't have taken a drink, you know. What'll he think of you, Bunker? Go in and astonish him!" Whereupon Bunker recrossed the street, and entered the saloon to "astonish" "Tom" by not drinking (!).

"Ah, Bunker, late this morning," observed the man behind the bar, with a significant smile.

"Yes, a little, Tom. Is that for me?" (the man was compounding a cocktail for either himself or Bunker, no other being present.)

"Of course, Bob. What makes you ask?"

If moral courage was ever needed by Bunker, it was then. We are sorry to say that it did not come to the support of Bunker in a signal way.

"Oh, nothing. I thought ——" The cocktail was pushed toward Bunker, and he reached for it. O moral courage, where wert thou then? Had you come to his support, Bunker could have said: "No, I'm done—no more for me; I'm going to switch off for a spell," and in spite of his craving he would have omitted the cocktail. He hadn't the moral courage to tell Tom that he was going to "switch off," for fear of being "chaffed," and so he reached for the concoction, and with this mental argument:

"Well, I'll take this, Bob, you bet, to brace me up—get my nerves steady. It's really a necessary tonic this morning to me, and any physician would recommend it under the circumstances. Once I get straightened up, then I'll bid good-bye to the stuff. I take it as medicine."

"What's the matter, Bob?—don't go 'gainst the grain, does it?" queried Tom, smilingly, as Bunker hesitated. That was your opportunity, Bunker, to have said: "Yes; hang the stuff! I'm off my feed." But no, Bunker, you weren't equal to this. You were afraid of Tom's chaffing, and you quaffed the cocktail, which your "hot coppers" yearned for. No doubt that cocktail was, in the circumstances, a good thing, per se, but you could have got along without it; and after your resolution of the previous night, taking it showed a lamentable weakness on your part, Bunker.

There would have been no use in denying that the cocktail had a certain beneficial effect on Bunker; it was too apparent. His step was lighter, and his countenance betokened an inward satisfaction that it did not previously portray, as he proceeded down town.

"Bunker, my boy, that'll be a good starting-point—the taking of that cocktail for a new departure, a season of total abstinence; and, under the circumstances, you needn't consider that you weakened—you absolutely needed the tonic; it was a hygienic necessity, my boy." Thus reasoned Bunker, as he went along, his reasoning nothing if not exculpatory. Dropping into a restaurant for a fair breakfast (he couldn't touch anything at home), and then spurred off for the store.

Within a few doors of the store was a "refreshment saloon." Bunker "slowed down" as he reached the vicinity of this place, and with Bunker this command—"Before you take a cocktail, Bunker, and then you'll be all right, my boy, and can start off on this new lay in good condish, you know. How you'll astonish the boys, Bunker, when you decline to drink with 'em, eh? One more cocktail to treat your resolution, old feller, and then goodbye for some six months!"

Bunker went into the saloon, and in a few moments Bunker came out of the saloon wiping his lips, the inference being that he took a cocktail. Then he stepped smartly off towards and into the store where he was employed as a salesman.

About twelve o'clock, the junior partner of the concern, who was on intimate terms with Bunker, came up to him and said: "Come, Bob, let's go and have a cocktail and a bite of something—I'm a little wolfish just now—come."

Bunker hesitated.

"Come along—what's the matter with you?"

O moral courage, whither was thy support? O Bunker, where was thy resolution?

"Well, the fact is, Dick, I'm—I'm going to take a rest on h'isting for a spell."

"You? Oh, the devil, Bob! Come along and take a cocktail. You aint obliged to go on a jamboree, you know. Come; I aint going alone."

Bunker yielded. How few would have resisted under the circumstances! He accompanied the junior partner, and with him partook of a cocktail. Before they got out, meeting with friends, they put in three cocktails each. While in the place, a party was made up to go out to Fleetwood that afternoon, and Bunker's employer—the junior partner—arranged to take Bob along in his wagon, as he often did. Bob having no voice in the matter whatever.

When, about nine o'clock, Bunker got home from the trot, after a champagne supper on the road, he was as jolly as they make 'em, owing to wins and winnings—he had won a hundred on the trot—and loving and liberal to his family, presenting Mrs. Bunker with twenty-five dollars (telling her he had won fifty, which was no lie); his two daughters (fourteen and twelve respectively) a dollar each; Tommy, the baby (three years old, and a boy), a dollar; and an extra five to Mrs. Bunker to get baby-things for "Bob," his infant son.

Everything was lovely in the Bunker household that evening. Bunker never was a "brute," albeit he would come home occasionally considerably more than "half seas over," with several "sheets in the wind," when Betsey (Mrs. Bunker) would "get on her ear," as Bunker expressed it. Bunker's reflections, as he retired that night, were as follows:

"What's the use of living, if a feller can't have a little fun? And how'a a feller to get fun out of this life, if he don't take a little something? I'm blest if I'm going to 'shut pan!' I'll draw it mild, though, and can get on my beam-ends any more, if I can help it."

The corner-stone of the Bunker Temple of Temperance is not yet laid. SI SLOCUM.

Chinamen Playing Tenpins.

Ti Si Wing and Ah Fung entered the room, and, after a hurried consultation, carried on in whispers, Ah Fung waltzed over to the proprietor, and in a modest manner remarked: "Me likee knockee dlounting-pin." From Ah Fung's remarks the proprietor very naturally inferred that the Mongolians desired playing a game. The alley was prepared, and the game began by Ti Si winding his pig-tail carefully round his cranium, and, after selecting a ball and walking up and down the alley a few times, sending it towards the pins. Four pins were down on the first ball, and Ti Si manifested his delight by a long and excited controversy with Ah Fung. Ti Si's second and third balls knocked down five more pins, and the result was chalked down in hieroglyphics on the blackboard. Then came the gallant Fung's turn, and, after walking down to the pins and examining them, he returned to the head of the alley and rolled. The ball went off the side and missed the pins, to the indescribable delight of Ti Si, who chalked something on the blackboard and refreshed himself by a "dink a watee." Fung appeared rather abashed when his second ball followed the first, and the pins all remained standing. This led to more chalk marks by Ti Si. Ah Fung, however, took up the third ball, and, after weighing it carefully in his hand, rolled it down the alley, and, to his own surprise and delight, made a ten strike. This was such an unlooked-for event that both Ti Si and Ah Fung walked down and looked at the pins, as if they doubted their eyesight. Ti Si then remarked: "He knockee down plenty," and then returned to the blackboard and made a couple of dozen chalk marks. When Ti Si rolled his first ball he ran some distance down the alley, and it struck Ah Fung that this was not right. A lengthy argument followed, and it was only ended by a "Melican" man being called, who decided that Ti Si should not gallop half way down the alley before he rolled the ball. The game went on in this way for an hour and twenty minutes, when the score stood: Ah Fung, 97; Ti Si, 105. In keeping the score Ti Si had a style all his own, and when the game was concluded the blackboard was literally covered with dots, dashes and half circles. After the game Ti Si and Ah Fung paid the score and left, greatly elated with the manner in which they had passed the evening.

HARD TIMES.

Hard Times is now on every lip,
And breathed from every tongue;
The banks are blamed by one and all,
The aged and the young.
The merchant has to close his doors,
And throw his ledger by;
Such times, he vows, were never seen
By any mortal eye.

The shopmen quit the counter's side,
For buyers are so few,
The times are now so very "tight"
It makes them all look blue;
The citizen in vain essays
To make more than his bread,
A pound of which he now declares
Won't weigh a pound of lead."

There's not a day but someone falls,
Some house that goes to smash,
And names that once stood high on 'Change,
Are out for want of cash.
Those whom we thought were millionaires,
And rich in shares and stocks,
Their million heirs now disappoint,
And fail and leave no "rocks."

Hard Times! Hard Times! was ever seen
Such times as hard as these?
This is the cry from morn till night,
In which each one agrees.
A remedy I think, I've found—
Say, how do you think 'twill do?
Pull off your coat, roll up your sleeves,
And work these Hard Times through.

Boxing the Compass.

Here is Young America at the wheel. A well-known clergyman was crossing Lake Erie, many years ago, upon one of the lake steamers, and seeing a small lad at the wheel, steering the boat, accosted him as follows:

CLERGYMAN.—"My son, you appear to be a small boy to steer so large a boat."

BOY.—"Yes, sir; but you see that I can do it, though."

"Do you think you understand your business, my son?"

"Yes, sir; I think I do."

"Can you box the compass?"

"Yes, sir."

"Let me hear you box it."

Boy boxes the compass.

"Well, really, you can do it! Let me hear you box it backward."

Boy boxes it backward.

"I declare, my son, you do seem to understand your business."

The boy now took his turn question-asking.

"Pray, sir, what may be your business?"

"I am a minister of the gospel."

"Do you then preach your business?"

"I think I do, my son."

"Can you say the Lord's Prayer?"

"Yes."

"Say it."

Clergyman repeats the Lord's Prayer.

"Well, really, you do know it! Now say it backward."

Clergyman says he cannot do it.

"You can't do it, eh? Now, you see, I understand my business a great deal better than you do yours."

Clergyman acknowledged himself beaten, and retired.

BARRY SULLIVAN

was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1824. After acting for some years in the provincial theatres he made his debut in London, Eng., Feb. 7, 1852, at the Haymarket Theatre, acting Hamlet. He came to America in 1858, making his first appearance at the Broadway Theatre in this city, then under the management of E. Eddy, Nov. 22, as Hamlet. During that engagement he acted Claude Melnotte, Macbeth, Shylock, Richelieu and Richard. He then fulfilled star engagements in the principal cities of this country, and returned to England in the Summer of 1860, shortly after which he assumed the management of the Lyceum Theatre, London. After the return from that theatre he resumed his starring tours in the provinces. He arrived in this city on Aug. 7, and will commence his second American tour at Booth's Theatre in this city on Aug. 30.

SPORTING MATTERS IN CHICAGO.

Prof. Miller, the Australian Athlete—Rowing as a Yachting—The Trigger—O'Leary the Walkist.

CHICAGO, Aug. 7, 1875.

DEAR CLIPPER.—A considerable stir has been created lately in athletic circles by the advent of Professor Miller, the "Australian Hercules." As he leaves us in a day or two to try his hand in New York, not having succeeded in getting anyone here to try conclusions with him, it will probably be interesting to your readers if I give you a few notes about him. Born in England, he left at a very early age for Australia, where he resided until last year, when he pulled up stakes for this country. He is a fine musician, where he has since resided, teaching sparring, fencing, and wrestling, and giving exhibitions. He had charge of the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium, and frequently exhibited at the Olympic Theatre, where Bennett was one of the reigning stars. Having wrestled successfully with Vandervecken, the Belgian athlete, he made three successive matches with Blondin, the rope-walking gentleman who is said to have been the famous "masked wrestler" who astonished the Parisian world some years ago. The first was declared a draw, in the second Blondin won two rounds out of three, and in the third each man won two rounds, after which the crowd broke into the ring and indulged in a free fight. In May last he walked 40 miles against H. Gilpin, alias Pennock, the New York champion; each man weighed about 200lb, and the track was on a wooden floor, with extremely short turns, yet Miller made the 40 miles in 10 hours, beating the mile in 9.15, while Gilpin gave in after passing the 35th mile, a mile and a half behind Miller. These facts I glean from the California papers of those dates. In walking fast, Miller has a long, swinging, graceful stride, swings his arms full length across his body, and brings every muscle into play; when sparring, the play of his arms and shoulders seems to lift his body off the floor and carry it along with great strides. Some think this gait might be objected to, and is not a fair "heel-and-toe" walk. Nothing was said about this, apparently, in the match, Mr. O'Leary will learn some points about "business" in these matters that were never dreamed of in his philosophy, and will learn to respect training more than he pretends to at present.

Yours, etc., PORT LOUIS.

ROBERT COLVIN, otherwise known as "Manchester Bob," intends to visit the shores of his native land shortly, to be gone about a twelvemonth. He is booked for passage on the steamer Spain, which leaves pier 44, North River, on Saturday next, Aug. 21, and no doubt there will be a "goodlie companie" there to give him a cheering send-off. During his stay in England, his son-in-law, Mr. Maginess, formerly of Hartlepool, Eng., who has been more than once successful in sculling contests on the coaly Tyne, will take charge of his place, the Eagle Hotel, 452 Carroll street, South Brooklyn.

LANGUAGE.—We are told on good authority by a country clergyman that some of the laborers in his parish had not three hundred words in their vocabulary. The vocabulary of the ancient sages of Egypt, at least so far as it is known to us from the hieroglyphic inscriptions, amounts to about six hundred and eighty-five words. The libretto of an Italian opera seldom displays a greater variety of words. A well-educated person in England, who reads his Bible, his Shakespeare, The Times and all the books of Mudie's library, seldom uses more than about three or four thousand words in actual conversation. Accurate thinkers and close reasoners, who avoid vague and general expressions, and wait till they find the word that exactly fits their meaning, employ a larger stock; and eloquent speakers may rise to a command of ten thousand. Shakespeare, who displayed a greater variety of expressions than probably any other writer in any language, produced all his plays with about fifteen thousand words. Milton's works are built up with eight thousand, and the Old Testament says all that it has to say with five thousand six hundred and forty-two words.—Muller's "Science of Language."

THE WIDOW AND HER PIG.—"Patrick, the widow Maloney tells me that you stole one of her finest pigs. Is it correct?" "Yis, yer honor." "What have you done with it?" "Shure it and ate it, yer honor." "Oh, Patrick, Patrick! when you are brought face to face with the widow and her pig on the Judgment Day, what account will you be able to give of yourself when the widow accuses you of stealing?" "Did you say the pig would be there, your reverence?" "To be sure I did." "Well, then, yer riverence, I'll say, 'Mrs. Maloney, there's yer pig.'"

PRIZE CROQUET.—Barron Brothers, proprietors of the Twin-mountain House, have ordered of a Boston firm an elegant croquet set for the exclusive use of the Beecher part'r; there are twelve balls and mallets, each of a different kind of wood, and the hoops are nickel-plated.

FRANK SINCERITY, though no invited guest, is free to all, and brings his welcome with him.

OLD LONDON FAIRS.

The exclusion of theatrical entertainments from Southwark Fair was not maintained in 1775, when Warner set up a booth on the Bowling-green, in conjunction with the widow of Yeates (who had died about this time), and revived the favorite London fair drama of "The Unnatural Parents." In the following year Warner's name appeared alone, as the proprietor of a "great tiled booth," in which he produced "The Lover's Metamorphosis," with dancing between the acts, and a pantomimic entertainment called "The Stratagems of Harlequin."

In 1757 Yates and Shuter, the former engaged at the time at Drury-lane and the latter at Covent-garden, tried the experiment of a variety entertainment, at the large concert-room of the Greyhound Inn, in Smithfield, "during the short time of Bartholomew Fair," as all bills and advertisements had announced, since the duration of the fair had been limited to three days. By this device they evaded the edict of the Lord Mayor and the Court of Aldermen, which applied only to the temporary erections in Smithfield. They did not repeat the experiment in Southwark, where the only booth advertised was Warner's, with "a company of comedians from the theatres," in "The Intriguing Lover" and "Harlequin's Vagaries."

Yates and Shuter reappeared at the Greyhound next year, when they presented "Woman Turned Bully," with singing between the acts, and a representation of the storming of Louisbourg. Theatrical representations were this year permitted or connived at in the fair, for Dunstall and Vaughan set up a booth in George Yard, associating with them in the enterprise the more experienced Warner, and announcing "a select company from the theatres royal." "The Widow Bewitched" was performed, with an entertainment of singing and dancing. Next door to the George Inn was an exhibition of wax-work, the chief feature of which was a collection of figures representing the royal family of Prussia.

Southwark fair was this year extended to four days, so fitful and varying was the policy of the Court of Aldermen with regard to the fairs, which, while they professed to regard them as incentives to idleness and vice, they encouraged in some years as much as they restricted in others. The names of Dunstall and Vaughan do not appear in the bills issued by Warner for this fair; but the comedy performed was the same as at Bartholomew Fair, followed by a representation of the capture of Louisbourg, concluding with a procession of colors and standards, and a song in praise of the heroes of the victory.

Yates and Shuter again attended Bartholomew Fair in the following year. Mr. Henry Morley claims for the latter the invention of the showman's device of announcing to the players, in a cant word, that there was another audience collected in front, and that the performances might be drawn to a close as soon as possible. Shuter's mystic words are said to have been "John Audley" shouted from the front. The practice appears, however, to have been in operation in the booth at the Court of Sadler's Wells, where, according to a description of the place, and the entertainments given by Macklin, in a conversation recorded in the fortieth volume of The European Magazine, the announcement was made in the query—"Is Hiram Fisteman here?"

It was about this time that the "cat opera" was announced by the famous animal-trainer Bisset, whose pupils, furred and feathered, were regarded as one of the most wonderful exhibitions ever witnessed. Bisset was originally a shoemaker at Perth, where he was born in 1721, but on coming to London, and entering the commbial state, he commenced business as a broker, and accumulated a large capital. Having read an account of a performing horse, which was exhibited at the fair of St. Germain in 1739, he was induced to try his own skill in the teaching of animals upon a dog, and afterwards upon a horse, which he bought for the purpose. Succeeding with these, he procured a couple of monkeys, one of which he taught to play a barrel-organ, while the other danced and vaulted on the tight-rope.

Cats are generally regarded as too susceptible of nervous excitement to perform in public, though their larger relatives, lions, tigers, and leopards, have been taught to perform a variety of tricks before spectators, and cats are readily taught to perform the same tricks in private. Bisset aimed at something higher than the exhibition of the leaping feats of the species, and succeeded in teaching three cats to play the dulcimer and squall the proper notes. By the advice of Pinchbeck, with whom he had become acquainted, he hired a large room in the Haymarket, and announced a public performance of the "cats' opera," supplemented by tricks of the horse, the dog, and the monkeys. Besides the organ-grinding and rope-dancing performances, the whole were brought together, and rode on the horse, pirouetting and somersetting with the skill of practiced acrobats. One of them also danced a minuet with the dog.

The cats' opera was attended by crowded houses, and Bisset cleared a thousand pounds by the exhibition in a few days. The performance was both Exotic and British. The Principal Figure is the Glory and Delight of Old England, and Envy of our Enemies. With the Variety of Entertainments of Singing and Dancing. The whole to conclude with a Musical Song on the approaching Marriage of our great and glorious Sovereign King George and Princess Charlotte of Mecklenberg."

There were two shows in George Yard, in one of which "the famous learned canary bird" was exhibited, the other consisting of a moving picture of a city, with an artificial cascade, and a magnificent temple, with two mechanical birds which have all the exact motions of living animals; they perform a variety of tunes, either singular or in concert. During the performance, the just swelling of the throat, the quick motions of the bills, and the fluttering of the wings, strike every spectator with pleasing astonishment."

Shuter seems to have been the last actor who played at Bartholomew Fair while engaged at a permanent theatre. Some amusing stories are told of his powers of mimicry. When Foote introduced in a piece which was supposed to be performed by cats, in imitation of Bisset's feline opera, he engaged for the purpose one Harris, who was famous for his power of producing the vocal sounds peculiar to the species. Harris being absent one day from rehearsal, Shuter went in search of him, and not knowing the number of the house in which Captain Harris, as he was called, resided, he began to perform a feline solo as soon as he entered the court in which lived the man of whom he was in search. Harris opened his window at the sound, and responded with a beautiful meeyow.

"You are the man!" said Shuter. "Come along! We can't begin the cats' opera without you."

There is a story told of Shuter, however, which is strongly suggestive of his ability to have supplied Capt. Harris' place. He was traveling in a Brighton stage-coach, on a very warm day, with four ladies, when the vehicle stopped to receive a sixth passenger, who could have played Falstaff without padding. The faces of the ladies elongated at this unwelcome addition to their number, but Shuter only smiled. When the stout gentleman was seated and the coach was again in motion, Shuter gravely inquired of one of the ladies her motive for visiting Brighton. She replied that her physician had advised sea-bathing as a remedy for mental depression. He turned to the others, and repeated his inquiries; the next was nervous, the third bilious—all had some ailment which the sea was expected to cure.

"Ah," sighed the comedian, "all your complaints put together are nothing to mine. Oh, nothing!—mine is dreadful to think of."

"Indeed, sir!" said the stout passenger, with a look of astonishment. "What is your complaint? You look exceedingly well."

"Ah, sir," responded Shuter, shaking his head, "looks are deceitful; you must know, sir, that three days ago I had the misfortune to be bitten by a mad dog, for which, I am informed, sea-bathing is the only cure. For that purpose I am going to Brighton; for though, as you observe, I am looking well, yet the fit comes on in a moment, when I bark like a dog, and endeavor to bite every one near me."

"Lord have mercy on us!" ejaculated the stout passenger, with a look of alarm. "But, sir, you are not in earnest—you ——"

"Bow-wow-wow!"

"Coachman, coachman! Let me out—let me out, I say."

"Now, your honor, what's the matter?"

"A mad dog is the matter!—hydrophobia is the matter! open the door!"

"Bow-wow-wow."

"Open the door! Never mind the steps. Thank God, I am safe out! Let those who like ride inside. I'll mount the roof."

So he rode to Brighton outside the coach, much to the satisfaction of Shuter and his fair companions, who were very merry at his expense, the former repeating at intervals his sonorous bow-wow-wow.

Theatrical booths and puppet-shows were again prohibited in 1763, and, as the jugglers, the acrobats, and the rope-dancers who attended the fairs did not advertise their performances, only casual notices are to be found in the newspapers of the period of the amusements which that generation flocked into Smithfield in the first week of September to witness, and which led them somewhat earlier to the greens of Camberwell and Stepney. Some of the entertainers of the period are mentioned in an anonymous poem on Bartholomew Fair, which appeared in 1763. The names are probably fictitious:

On slender cord Volante treads;
The earth seems paved with human heads;
And as she springs aloft in air,
Trembling they crouch below for fear.
A well-made form Querpero shows,
Well-skilled that form to decompose;
The arms forget their wonted state:
Standing on earth, they bear his weight:
The head falls downward 'twixt the thighs,
The legs mount upward to the skies,
And thus this topsy-turvy creature
Stalks and derides the human nature.
Argyta, famed for cup and ball,
Plays sleight-of-hand and pleases all;
The certainty of sense in vain
Philosophers in schools maintain;
This man your sharpest wit defies,
He cheats your watchful ears and eyes.
Ah, 'prentice, well your pockets fence,
And yet he steals your master's pence.

A WHITE GIRL ELOPES WITH A NEGRO.

The Town Hall at Babylon, Long Island, was densely crowded yesterday at the examination in the case of the negro Chauncey Brewster, who is charged with seducing Llewella Conklin, the adopted daughter of Mrs. Dora Balcher, a widow lady residing at Deer Park in that village. A singular interest attaches to the case, owing to the wealthy position of the young lady and the superstition manifested by the negro and his friends. The particulars show that Brewster had either obtained an astonishing amount of influence over Miss Conklin, or had resorted to drugs to effect his purpose. A popular superstition exists among the negroes of Babylon that the possessor of a certain "love charm" may, by its use, secure the enduring affection of the other sex. The charm consists in a four-ounce bottle, which contains ten needles and nine pins, and is refilled with water every month. Brewster carried one of these bottles with him, and claims to have charmed Miss Conklin by its influence. He has watched over Llewella for several years ago, and has always treated her with the greatest kindness and consideration. About two months ago she manifested her affection for Llewella by making a will by which the latter would come into the possession of $30,000 at the death of her adopted mother, and of which she had been apprised. Although Mrs. Balcher had always permitted her daughter to go into society, she had been, perhaps, unduly careful in the selection of her associates, and had not permitted her to mingle freely in the society of young men. Llewella had developed a taste for music, and, to gratify her wishes, Mrs. Balcher engaged as her teacher a popular professor of this city, from whom she received lessons twice a week. She had otherwise received good educational advantages, and possessed many accomplishments. The colored coachman, who was the author of the terrible disgrace to the family, as PHILADELPHIA vs. ST. LOUIS.

The sixth championship game between the Philadelphia and St. Louis Clubs was played on the 9th inst., on the former's ground, at Twenty-fifth and Jefferson streets, Philadelphia. The weather was delightful, but the attendance was small, not more than fifteen hundred persons being present. Bradley did not play with the St. Louis Club, the ostensible reason therefor being a sore finger caused by an accident in a game a week previously. Calvin was substituted and pitched well, but was very poorly supported. The Philadelphias led off at the bat, Murnan, their first striker, being given a base on called balls; Addy, Meyerle, Fulmer and Snyder following with hard, clean hits, that led to the scoring of three runs. In the next two innings two base hits by McMullin and Snyder, and errors by Battin, Pearce and Waitt, led to the scoring of five more runs. The Philadelphias gradually increased their score until it reached 16, while the St. Louis nine were retired in nine consecutive innings without scoring a run, the nearest approach thereto being in the fourth inning, when Haug and Waitt made good hits, the latter's a two-baser, but the former was caught at the home-plate by the sharp fielding of Fulmer on Dehlman's hit. The pitching of Josephs was very effective, and the batting of the Philadelphia nine the best thing they have displayed this season.

MUTUAL vs. NEW HAVEN.

A game which was praiseworthy mainly in the matter of effective pitching, each side being guilty of numerous errors, was played by the above-named clubs at New Haven, Ct., Aug. 9. In the fifth inning the home team did better work than at any other period of the contest, preventing the Mutes from scoring, though they had the bases full thrice in succession:

HARTFORD vs. MUTUAL.

A succession of ciphers was the reward of the New York professionals for taking a trip to Hartford, Ct., on the 10th inst., the game being one of the very best which the home nine have played since the season opened. Harbridge's play behind was especially brilliant and worthy of praise, but Bond's pitching constituted the great feature of the contest.

A very hotly contested game was played on the 10th between the Louisville and Olympic Clubs, which resulted in a victory for the former. In all the previous games of the series the Olympics have been victorious, but the amateur boys have materially strengthened their nine by the addition of several new players, and from present appearances are on the high road to many more such victories before the season ends. The Louisvilles certainly outplayed the "Olymps" in every particular, and astonished their most enthusiastic admirers by their heavy batting and splendid fielding. That the Louisville Club contains some good talent has not been doubted, and that it is rapidly developing itself is shown by their recent games.

A meeting was held at the Galt House on the 7th for the purpose of organizing a professional club for the season of 1876, and it was very largely attended. It was decided to place the capital stock at $20,000, and the shares at $100 each; and it was further decided that none but first-class professionals should be engaged. As a number of our best merchants have taken hold of it, its success is assured, and already a majority of the stock has been subscribed for. The club has commenced looking for a professional manager, and thoroughly competent parties are requested to address the secretary, Charles E. Chase, No. 12 Third street, Louisville, Ky. With first-class professional clubs in Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Louisville, the West ought to carry off some of the championship honors next season.

T. B. F. U. S. vs. TUTTLE & BAILEY.

The Tuttle & Bailey Club, which has been making a tour of the Eastern States, visited Bridgeport, Ct., on the 10th, and received a severe defeat at the hands of the T. B. F. U. S. Club of that city. The noticeable feature of the game was the fine playing of Roseman, Larkin and Darrigan of the T. B.'s, and Gormley and Duffy of the opposing nine.

CAPITAL vs. LEXINGTON.

About twelve hundred people, a large number of whom were Lexingtonians, witnessed the return game of the Capitals vs. Lexingtons on Bellepoint Grounds, at Frankfort, Ky., Aug. 6. The Capitals achieved a brilliant victory over their opponents, by a score of 11 to 6, thus constituting themselves the amateur champions of Kentucky. Some fine batting and beautiful fielding were done on both sides, but the scientific base-hits and superior fielding of the Frankfort Club secured them the victory. They played two new men, Murphy and Pierce, late of the Cincinnati Americus Club, who lately made Frankfort their home, and will play with the club as volunteers. They made quite an improvement in the nine, as both are very skillful players.

CITY SUMMARY.

THE BRYANT BENEFIT FUND.—In the treasurer's report of the benefits and donations to this fund, published in our past issue, we notice no credit is given to Mr. Barney Williams, who on Thursday, April 15, we find by referring to our files, gave his check for $250, he being one of the first contributors. This comedian subsequently contributed the sum of $50 towards procuring a grave for the deceased. Of course the latter donation did not necessarily require mention in the report. We also find that public credit was given the same time to W. B. Floyd for donating $100, and J. W. Collier for $50, neither of which is credited in the treasurer's report. Have there been any other omissions? And if so, why so?

THE ATTENDANCE continued large at Wood's Museum during the past week, the desire to witness Mr. Barry's dramatization of "The Spy" not having apparently abated in the least. Dominick Murray will, we think, find this drama one of the most attractive in his repertory the coming season. It was withdrawn after the performance of Aug. 14. "Underneath the Sea," assumed definite shape, it is thought, probable that such may be the fate of one of the most beautiful theatres in the world.

HUGHEY DOUGHERTY arrived from England in the steamship Adriatic on Aug. 14. He opens at the Globe Theatre, under R. W. Butler's management, on Aug. 28.

MISS JULIA MATTHEWS, supported by the Henderson and Colville Gaiety Company from London, Eng., will make her American debut at Wallack's Theatre, Aug. 19, in a version of Offenbach's opera-bouffe of "Barbe Bleue," which, in its English dress, has been reconstructed and arranged by Mr. F. Stanislaus, the musical director of the company, and will be produced under the name of "Boulotte," Miss Matthews assuming the title role.

FIRST-CLASS STARS desiring to perform at the Bowery Theatre are requested to make immediate application for time to J. W. Meath, manager, or Milnes Levick, stage-manager.

THE KIRALFY BROTHERS open their season at the Academy of Music on Thursday evening, Aug. 26, when "Around the World" will be presented in the same style of gorgeousness and splendor as on the occasion of its original production at the Porte St. Martin Theatre, Paris, France.

THE GRAND OPERA-HOUSE is to be opened for a season, this evening, Aug. 16, with "Around the World in Eighty Days," which is to be elaborately mounted. The tariff of admission to all parts of the house has been reduced to a very reasonable rate, and the managers are active and persevering.

R. W. BUTLER is actively pushing forward the work of thoroughly cleansing and redecorating the Globe Theatre, which will be opened under his management on or about Aug. 23. He will be assisted by Frank Mordaunt, and the stage is under the direction of the veteran Mons. La Thorne.

GEORGE WALLACK, who informs us that he has secured the lease of the Academy of Music, Pittsburg, Pa., for the coming season, is in town in search of talent for the stock company on or about Sept. 6, and entertainments will be given by dramatic, variety and other combinations.

THE BOWERY THEATRE is to be opened for the season August 28, under the management of J. W. Meath, aided by Milnes Levick as stage-manager. The company will include F. A. Tannehill, E. W. Marston, J. B. Browne, W. H. Partello, J. L. Mason, Louis Meredith, Charles Manly W. A. Rouse, the Misses Laura Linden, Nellie Young, Mary Hill, Ida Raymond, Fanny Denham Rouse, Frank Howard, Nellie Melville and Alice Conroy. The opening bill will include "The Lady of Lyons" and "The Rough Diamond."

R. E. STEPHENS, business manager of Furbish's Fifth-avenue Theatre Company, leaves for Philadelphia Aug. 15 to prepare for their coming engagement.

RUMORS have been rife for some time past regarding a proposed sale of the Grand Opera-house to a stock company that proposes to alter the edifice into a vast concert or music hall. Although the matter has not, as yet, assumed definite shape, it is thought probable that such may be the fate of one of the most beautiful theatres in the world.

HUGHEY DOUGHERTY arrived from England in the steamship Adriatic on Aug. 14. He opens at the Globe Theatre, under R. W. Butler's management, on Aug. 28.

INTRODUCTORY OVERTURE.

MONDAY, Aug. 16, '75.

In the way of amusements the week just closed was barren of "glorious results," the only novelty presented being "A Bunch of Berries," which too closely followed the lead of "The Belles of the Kitchen" to lay claim to being a "new novelty," which nobody can deny. The Vokeses labored hard to make something of it, but when a play does not possess the material to work upon, the actors may save it from being a dead failure, but they cannot make it a living and an enduring success. "The Belles" still remains the Vokeses stronghold, and when new ventures are found wanting, when weighed in the public balance, they will return to the old "Kitchen," and find a reward for their labor there. ..... Some of our friends may not have visited Robinson Hall during the heated term; if so, they have missed a very clever entertainment, and been deprived of the opportunity of enjoying a pretty good and cooling attraction. Robinson Hall is a cozy little place, and about as comfortable as "the coolest house in the city." Opera-bouffe, in English, is nicely put on, and the company appear to be on good terms all around, a sort of happy family congregation, as it were, reminding us of "the palmy days of the old Park—," or, we should say, of "the old Olympic." The manager makes no high-sounding promises, no pretensions to gorgeousness, no clap-trap announcements; he simply proposes to give a pleasing miniature entertainment, and he certainly does. We dropped in here one evening last week to take a ten minutes' observation, but the performance and the performers were so much to our liking that we sat the entertainment through. The bills announce an interval of ten minutes between acts, and the audience departs and returns with a unanimity highly commendable, quietly go out to "see a man," and as quietly return after having fulfilled the object of their mission. Everything is conducted orderly, and players and people evidently understand one another, and mutually endeavor to please and to be pleased. We see in this little place what may be the nucleus for another "Mitchell's Olympic" troupe—what we have long needed in this city. Manager Robinson may find it to his interest to present something in the style of the burlesques that made Mitchell's name so popular in the long ago. ..... And talking about Moody and Sankey, which nearly everybody is doing just now, reminds us that our friends in Brooklyn think of sending to the pulpit the chief-engineer of a hennery over there, because he's such a good egg-sorter! ..... And while upon this pious subject, has it ever occurred to you, beloved reader, that Episcopal clergymen are never poor? Well, it's really a fact. After diligent search, and interviewing nervous women and children when the head of the house was absent, we find that each man lives well, dresses well, takes his family to Summer resorts, and, notwithstanding the heavy expenses attending such matters, he still has a surplice that covers everything! (Thank you; James may go and take a "ball" with you, but we're not on it to-day. Excusez moi!) ..... Some seronauts are becoming more cautious since Donaldson "went up," and other some don't care whether they ascend in the air or not. This is Wise, to say the least ..... Bouncicault has secured such a hold upon the affections, and so forth, of the people of this city, that they even showed their attachment for him on board the steamer that carried him away on Aug. 11. But a dramatist sometimes becomes tired of too much attention, and so Boucy exclaimed: "Give us a rest!" And arrest it was, even as the fog was about to cast off from the ocean steamer ..... And this reference to different things induces James to suggest that those "gassy" individuals, who are seen and heard at all public dances, should be known hereafter as ball-"loons." ..... The show business is looking up. And now they are teaching dogs to turn somersets from feet to feet, a feat more difficult of accomplishment than may appear to the uninitiated. And yet this very thing may have been done hundreds of years ago; for, it would seem by a perusal of the articles on "Old Paris," now being published in THE CLIPPER, that we really have nothing new in the way of startling performances, nearly everything that we believed to have originated with us having been successfully practiced by old showmen "a hundred years ago." Educated hogs, thought to have first seen the light of late years, went through their paces long before we were born, fellow craftsmen. And the old-timers knew all about living skeletons and mammoth fat women, thus proving that we have no legal claim to the invention of such curiosities. Have you read those articles? Well, now, it will be "worth your while" to give them an attentive perusal. You will be astonished. Why the very sideshow blower, that we take such pride in as one of our own home productions, dilated upon the marvels in his show two centuries ago, with "painted picters to match." Ah! we are not sure of anything, nowadays. ..... And now we are told, after many days of watching and waiting, that the first person born with a call was the prompter. Lucky man! ..... We are pained to learn that Messrs. Jarrett & Palmer have been fined five hundred dollars for carrying, on the Plymouth Rock, more passengers than the law allows. Commodore Tooker took a desperate risk when he sought to plough the raging main in unseamanlike disguise. ..... And speaking of voyages, other managers are on it, as you shall hear!

ALL ABOARD.

Two lines will start "Around the World"—
When Hamilton first thought of his.
Around "The" whirled until he found
"Joe" Wheelock, with an eye to biz.
The gay Kiralfys promise their's
Resplendent in the calcium's blaze,
With Gallic glories here known—
A corps of fays for corypheus!

....."Our Jim" says that no matter h*o* other stars may fare as they travel from place to place, there is no fear of Rose When she goes. She's not having sustenance, for go where they may they will always carry with them "A Bit o' Ash." ..... A correspondent in Dayton, O., proposes to get up a sideshow on a mammoth scale so as to take in the Centennial people. He wants to secure the following curiosities, cheap for cash: A tooth from the mouth of the Ohio, a lock of hair from the head of a river, a bucket of water from "All's Well," a splinter from a "Board of Trade," some stoppers to "Family Jars," a shoe from the foot of a mountain, a plate of butter from the "Cream of a Joke," the head of a dilemma, a performing flea from the Dog-star, some milk of human kindness, the chair the sun sets in, a footprint made by Dame Fortune, and a chip from off the North Pole. ..... There is to be no prize fight at Booth's Theatre, Long Island. Who in the world put such a notion into your head? You heard that Yankee Sullivan is to be one of the principals, and that Mayor Wickam has ordered out a regiment of soldiers to "prevent the brutal exhibition?" Somebody has been guying you, Jimmy. It is not Yankee Sullivan, but another gentleman from Ireland who is to act in Booth's Theatre; and the regiment of soldiers is a volunteer demonstration in his honor ..... Manager Furbish intends to play "The Two Orphans" as his strong card during the approaching season. Speaking John D. Gray as a "professional" friend, he assured us that that kind of play isn't regular euchre, because the man who plays Jacks (Jacques?) loses in the end. Pierres likely! ..... Gilmore's great cornet soloist will go it solo no longer. Why? Because he has made a key on a Brooklyn actress, and will be married at once from that benighted city, which looks upon the transaction as another Minnie rifle [Translation: Levy the cornet-player was married to Minnie Conway the actress, in Brooklyn, yesterday. No cards.] ..... If variety is the spice of life, as some one has proved scientists, then life in New York the coming season will be all spice, as we may have told you before; because variety promises to be one of the strongest elements of our amusements. Four theatres will be devoted to that line of business, and, as the strife for supremacy promises to be sharp and fierce, each will endeavor to present a strong company, composed of many of the most talented artists in the profession. The Metropolitan will be presided over by the people's favorite Pastor; the Theatre Comique will flourish under the distinguished control of Col. T. A. Brown; Olympic will be New York's great Pools room; and the Eagle, whose nest is high up among the Thirties, will have, as it will need, a liberal Hart to control its destinies. So while "the legitimate stage" may have its wrangles over "Rose Michel" and "the great Napoleon as the world sees him," the variety boards will have it hot and heavy in the free-for-all race for first place. ..... Did you ever notice how like a ship the theatre is? No? Well, it's really so; for each has to depend upon it's tars! A ship is more like the prize-ring than you may make that out, Jimmy! Both are neither of you could get along without its spars! Oh no; there's no need of splicing the main brace on that. ..... "The members for cork" are bottling up their "*effer*vescences" for an early outpouring of geniality and jocularity. Cotton & Reed's minstrels are already rehearsing for an early opening; while the busy B's are gathering honey from the never-to-be-forgotten little faded flour. And this reminds us that Mr. Ryman goes on again with the Frisco boys. Add hearing that he was a favorite, showed his shrewdness by adhering to the old party. By so doing he will doubtless add, here, to his cash account. ..... The circus boys are getting up an excitement concerning the feat of leaping over two or three dozen of horses; and matches are talked of, and money is flaunted, and challenges are issued and accepted, and so forth, until the thing is stale. One gentleman boasts of having leaped over a number of horses and thrown a triple-somerset in the rapid transit. This, if correct, is a wonderful achievement. A rising rival doubts the whole story, and proposes to try conclusions with the triple man. Both certainly, circus performers are improving in some line or other every year, and there is no telling where they will stop. What did you say? That you saw a horse fly over the river and swallow up a tree? Why, that's an old act in Irish halls. Why, Jimmy, that's another thing altogether—when you assert that you saw a Fish ride on horseback, we can believe it, because we have seen the same remarkable performance; but when you undertake to convince us that you saw an elephant jump through a pea, you can come to other no conclusion than that you have been reading the clown's own book and ready reckoner. Now, don't try to impose upon us the yarn that you saw a rope walk! Why, they're all old. Perhaps you had better walk yourself, and so end this bit of nonsense.

DION BOUCICAULT was arrested on board of the steamship Bothnia, on Aug. 12 (as she was sailing for Liverpool), at the suit of Robert McWade, for libel; the damages being laid in the sum of $10,000. The libelous matter appeared in a card, emanating from Mr. Bouicicault, during the Bouicault-Hart imbroglio last Winter, which was published in a morning journal. We excerpt that portion of the card which has a bearing on the present case:

I have resolved to pursue and exterminate those impudent pirates and audacious thieves who prowl around the purlieus of the drama to annoy every success. They infested the career of Mr. Joseph Jefferson, and I am sorry to add that their manifest impotence in his case (I allude particularly to the case of one Robert McWade) was rather encouraged and supported by some of the press, instead of being held up to just reprobation. Yours truly,

New York, Feb. 17, 1875. DION BOUCICAULT.

Upon Mr. Boucicault's return from California, during the past week, Mr. McWade procured an order of arrest from one of the Judges of the Supreme Court, with an order to hold the defendant to bail in the sum of $1,000. As this case has been grossly misrepresented in one of the morning journals, we will give the facts. The order of arrest was placed in the hands of a deputy sheriff on Tuesday, Aug. 10, with instructions to serve it immediately on Mr. Boucicault. Upon proceeding to his residence, No. 20 East Fifteenth street, Mr. Boucicault was not to be found, although the house was watched until a late hour at night. It is said that he had got wind of the coming trouble, and by advice went to Jersey City, and remained there until the steamer sailed. On Wednesday the deputy-sheriff took a tug at the foot of Jay street, and when the steamer Donau left her dock in Jersey City the tug sailed by its side until the steamer was in New York waters, and then the deputy-sheriff boarded her. The deputy-sheriff then went to the steward's room, and inquired the number of Mr. Boucicault's stateroom, and, upon being told, went thither, found Mr. Boucicault, and served the process upon him. The deputy-sheriff also informed Mr. Boucicault that he would simply be required to give bail in the sum of $1,000, and that a bail-bond was in readiness; whereupon the latter offered John McCullough and John A. Pinard—the former the manager of the California Theatre, San Francisco, Cal., and the latter a keeper of a restaurant in Mr. Boucicault's residence—as bondsmen, who were accepted, and Mr. Boucicault continued on his journey. There was no attempt to persecute Mr. Boucicault, as is evident from the proceedings. The damages could easily have been laid at a much higher figure, and the bail required could have been such a sum as Mr. Boucicault would have been unable to justify in without deferring his passage. Every advantage of high praise, which the libelous matter appeared in a card, emanating from Mr. Boucicault, during the Bouc

VARIETY NEWS from Pittsburg, Pa., up to Aug. 13, is sent by our correspondent as follows: "Trimble's Varieties (Theatre, Fred Aims manager, was reopened for the Fall and Winter season on Aug. 7. The capacity of the house was inadequate to the accommodation of all seeking admission. The improvements recently made added much to the appearance of the theatre. New mattings cover the steps and floors, the auditorium is freshly and prettily painted, boxes have been redecorated, and the stage is supplied with considerable new scenery. As all the members of the new company did not arrive in time to take part in the performances of the 7th, I will review the entertainment of the 9th, at which time the company was complete. 'A Lawyer's Mishap' commenced the show, the farce being played by Joe Lang and George W. Herman. Vocalisms, by Miss Annie Fox, came next, the lady receiving a triple encore. Charles Benedict's poetic readings provoked uproarious laughter. As a negro comedian this gentleman is becoming very clever. 'The Maniac' was presented by Rob. V. Furgeson, and his performance was characterized with commendable versatility and originality, and was very generously applauded. The songs-and-dances of Manchester and Jennings were accorded enthusiastic greetings, and were twice redemanded. 'The Flags We Love to See' was rendered by Mlle. Zittella with good effect. The lady's neat figure, so costumed as to display it to the best possible advantage, combined with her creditable vocalization, made her a favorite at once. The specialties of Chas. Walters were received with decided favor. Lizzie Watson and Harry Braham, in their parlor entertainment, won many encomiums for their fine singing, artistic acting, and handsome costumes. 'Jefferson and Booth,' Benedict's original piece, and played by Benedict and Furgeson, provoked an inordinate degree of hilarity. The clog-dancing of John Williams I have never seen excelled as to time, ease of motion and variety of steps. Miss Angie Schott pleased with her facial act of 'Masks and Faces,' and the Stuart Sisters in their songs-and-dances made a good impression. The acrobatic and gymnastic feats of the Lenton Family, five in number, were lavishly applauded. The farce of 'The Editor's Troubles' closed the performances, the leading roles having been impersonated by Messrs. Herman, Benedict, Walters, Jennings and Lang. The attendance was good, and has continued so all the week. Prof. Fred Taerge retains the leadership of the efficient orchestra. Family matinees will be given on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Mlle. Zittella and the Stuart Sisters leave after the 14th, going to Baltimore, I believe. Cool Burgess, Harris and Carroll, and the Antonio Sisters commence an engagement on Aug. 16.....The Fifth-avenue Comedy Theatre will be thrown open to the public on Aug. 16, under the direction of Sam E. Ryan. The company will consist of John Hart, Blanche Selwyn, Jennie Sothern, Ida De Vere, Lucy Adams, Florence Wells, Alice Ross, Goss and Fox, T. Warfield, Ed. Murray, Ed. Banker, Ben Gilfoil, Guy Linton, M. Herman, and C. Hicks. An entertainment will be given on the evening of the 13th to newspaper reporters and a few others specially invited by the management."

THE SHERIDAN AND MACK COMBINATION, during their forthcoming tour, will perform in a burletta entitled "The Mimics," written expressly for them by Edward E. Kidder.

JOHN E. FULTON has leased Brainard's Opera-house, Cleveland, O., which he intends opening under the title of the Globe Theatre on Sept. 6. The officers will be as follows: Proprietor and manager, John E. Fulton; stage-manager, Nat Hyams; treasurer, Elwood T. Jones; musical director, E. H. Garlicks; manager of publications, Frank Lavarnie; scenic artist, G. H. Walker; prompter, H. C. White; machinist and gas man, Harvey Nouels; property man, Fred Nichols; and costumer, Miss Nelly Lasfey. The opening company, so far as engaged, will include Annie Hindle, Carrie Lavarrie, Clara Belmont, Mme. Berretta and her ten trained dogs and canary birds; the Taylor Family—Joe, Jessie and Little Walter—Kirk and Drew, the Onzalo Brothers, Charles Diamond, Harry Dunbar, Sam Norman, Charles Goodman, Nat Hyams, Charles Lovell, W. N. Compston, J. H. Wesner, H. A. Strong, Imogene Kent Hyams, Nellie Carlse and Minnie Shires. The dramatic stars for the opening are W. H. Collings and Clara Seabrook.

AT THE THEATRE COMIQUE, Washington, D. C., an excellent programme was presented during the past week, and it attracted large audiences. The Waite Sisters—Emma, Nettie, and Hattie—in their burlesque sketches were the new appearances on Aug. 9. They met with favor. The departures Aug. 14 were the Monzert Sisters, to New York, and Miss Kate Harvey, who retires permanently from the stage and goes to her home in Indianapolis, Ind., and where her husband is engaged in business. Antoinette Kurtz, dancer, is the only announcement for Aug. 16. "Ixion" is underlined.....The Avenue Theatre did an excellent business during the week, attracting first-class audiences. The new arrivals Aug. 9 were Fred D. Harris, in character songs; Fanny Florence, in songs-and-dances; and Cora Cushman, in serio-comic songs; all of whom were well received. Sheffer and Nelson, in their songs-and-dances and Ethiopian specialties, are great favorites. Miss Georgie Brown was the only departure Aug. 14, going to the Baltimore. Bijou L. Price is the attraction on the 16th. The announcements for Aug. 16 are Prince Leo, a child wonder; Walla and Nellie Leonard, and Mlle. Albertazzi. Advices of Aug. 15.

THE BUSINESS at the Odeon, Baltimore, Md., during the past week has been on a par with the programme offered—very good. The arrivals on Aug. 9 were Lillie Linden, a vocalist whose merits have previously been reviewed; and Lillian Forrest, a dashing and pleasing vocalist. The only departure 14th was Charley Mills. May Florence and Sheffer and Nelson are underlined for 16th.....Baltimore has heretofore been considered free from the Centennial fever; but it seems to have reached us at last in the shape of "The Centennial Varieties," a new establishment located on Baltimore street, between the bridge and the Maryland Institute, which will open its doors for the first time to the public on Aug. 19, under the management of G. W. Thater, with Frank Howe as stage-manager. The array of talent engaged for the opening performances embraces the following: Johnny Brassell, the Walby Sisters, the Irwin Sisters, Bertie Daly, Tillie Russell, Little Lottie, Emma Gertrude, James Dalton, and the Morris Brothers. Letter without date.

THE GRAND CENTRAL THEATRE, Cincinnati, O., writes our correspondent on Aug. 13, "is about completed. It has been newly stocked with scenery by De Witt C. Waugh, and will be opened on Aug. 16. The company announced consists of Harry Macarthy, Lottie Estelle, B. C. Hart, Frank Jones, Lottie Brown, Minnie Gray, Gilday and Gineven, La Belle Pauline, Ida Morton, Bonnie Nelson, Lascini's Parisian Troupe, and Eugene Gorman. R. D. Rinkle Jr. will be leader of orchestra. John W. Guilck & Co. are proprietors; Joe A. Guilck, manager; and Eugene F. Gorman, stage-manager.....The National opens on the 28th.....No changes to report at the Adelphi."

LIZZIE AND HARRY BRAHAM, musical sketch artists, advertise in another column.

ALL COMMUNICATIONS for Harrigan & Hart's Combination can be addressed to Manager Hanley, as per card. They will perform at the Boston (Mass.) Museum until Aug. 22, Philadelphia, Pa., to follow, 23 to 28.

GEO. MURRAY is referred to J. Burrough's card in another column.

HIRAM THOMPSON and Clara Moreton were united in marriage on Aug. 12 at the National Hall, No. 10 N. Frederick street, Baltimore, Md.

HARRY G. RICHMOND, variety artist, can be addressed as per advertisement.

MANAGER MACFARLAND of Macfarland's Opera-house, Grand Rapids, Mich., came to sudden grief on Aug. 8 on account of a lack of "filthy lucre," wherewith to settle his expensive combination. The people asked for salaries before the show commenced, and, failing to get the same, quietly withdrew, leaving the manager to do as he might. A number of those who were "left" leased the hall, and played for benefits for three nights, but with indifferent success. Letter of Aug. 13.

TONY PASTOR'S TROUPE, at the conclusion of the engagement at the Globe Theatre, Boston, Mass., open for one week at the Chestnut-street Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., on Aug. 23, and commence the regular season at Pastor's New Opera-house, this city, Oct. 4. First-class performers desiring engagements are requested to address as per advertisement.

JAMES HEYWOOD'S GREAT SHOW is billed at Lowell, Mass., Aug. 18, Nashua 19, Ayres 20, Fitchburg 21, Worcester 23.

THE WAITE SISTERS are at present performing at the Theatre Comique, Washington, D. C., where they can be addressed. They open at the National Theatre, Cincinnati, O., and will be at liberty Sept 13.

WILLIAM LESLIE and Miss Lizzie Byron, died in Brooklyn Aug. 5, at the age of 2 months and 7 days. Pennsylvania papers, please copy.

BOTH VARIETY ESTABLISHMENTS in St. Louis, Mo., are hard at work getting ready to scoop in the ducats. The Theatre Comique has during the past eight weeks been in the hands of painters and carpenters, who have transformed the "old place" into as neat a variety theatre as one would wish to enter. The season will open on Saturday, Sept. 18, with a first-class entertainment—so Manager Mitchell promises. The names of the new company have not yet been ascertained. Mr. Dick Parker will fill his old place as stage-manager. Signor Tito Cellini brings a new ballet troupe to the front, and Frank Cardella wields the baton in the orchestra, as usual. Mr. Harry Noxon will be found in his accustomed place in the box-office, and Manager Wm. Mitchell will be on hand to receive his friends.....Manager Geo. J. Deagle is hard at work getting his house in first-class order for next season. The front of the house will be handsomely painted, the private boxes are to be made more private, and iron opera-chairs are to replace the wooden ones in the parquet. New gas and calcium, effects have been introduced, and the heating apparatus has been improved. Mr. Deagle will be the general manager; Jaques Kruger, business manager; E. Eddy Jr., treasurer; Charles Cochrane, advertising agent. Besides the variety performers, a permanent stock company has been engaged, of which the following are the principal members: Frank Frayne, leading man; Carrie Ethel, leading lady; Clara Butler, soubrette; Frank Bangs, Chas. Waverly, May Howard, Nellie Lewis, Frank Edwards. The negro acts will be furnished by Jno. Harry, Larry Tooley, and Frank Dowd. Sig. Castellotti, ballet-master of a troupe of fourteen, led by Miles. Croci, Elsie, Gordol, and Pauli. Regular season commences Sept. 5. Letter dated Aug. 12.

AT DEAGLE'S THEATRE, St. Louis, Mo., business continues fair. The cancan is still on the bills. Huber and Glidden, the Musical Mokes, do a very pleasing act. The Ryan Bros. in their clog-dance always receive an encore. Geo. W. Thompson appears to advantage as Peter Pimblebluck, in the afterpiece of "The St. Louis Detective." Harry Ellis, Jaques Kruger and Jennie Satterlee render good support. Miss Adelaide Stewart, and Huber and Glidden close Aug. 14.....Looney's Varieties is doing well. No new faces, no departures. Advices of Aug. 12.

CHARLEY SHAY wants to engage first-class performers and twelve musicians for the eighteenth annual tour of his Quincuplexal Troupe, commencing Sept. 13. Address as per card.

IRISH, Dutch and negro comedians are wanted by John E. Healy, whose address is care of this office.

CHAS. HENRY and brother, horizontal-bar performers, advertise that they can be engaged.

FRANK CUSHMAN, who is at present stage-manager of the Germania Varieties, Scranton, Pa., where he can be addressed, can be engaged after Sept. 6 for his old men and song-and-dance specialties.

CHILD ARTISTS and a partner are wanted for a little folks' troupe. See card.

SPECIALTY PERFORMERS and a good working agent are wanted by Wm. E. Gillespie, who advertises.

LITTLE LEO, and Walla and Nellie Leonard closed at Miller's Summer Garden, Philadelphia, on the 14th inst. The Transatlantic Combination are to reappear at this establishment on the 16th.

JOHN T. KELLY (Dublin Dan) and Alice D'Erina have been giving entertainments in the vicinity of Montreal.

ALICE DE FAVRE'S Cancan Troupe produced "The Female Bathers" at the Adelphi Theatre, Detroit, Mich., for the second week, beginning Aug. 9. Fair bits; no improvement in performers. They repeat the cancan for next week, being their last.....The Ernest Byne Troupe opens at the Theatre Comique on Aug. 16 for one week. Manager Welch has announced the 23d as the opening night of the new Fall season, the company not being as yet completed.....Harry Wood paid us a flying visit on the 11th, greeting his many friends, who hope to see him professionally during the season.....J. P. Hill met with an accident at the Adelphi Theatre on the 9th. While coming down the rope, head foremost, after finishing his trapeze act, the rope broke, precipitating him on the chairs underneath, dislocating his shoulder blade. Letter of Aug. 14.

THE THEATRE COMIQUE, Richmond, Va., having been thoroughly renovated, the stage enlarged, etc., will be opened for the Fall and Winter season Aug. 30. The following talent has been engaged so far: The Wood Sisters—Carrie, Addie and Elsie—Allie Belmont, Harry Fenner, Charles Morris and Bob Stanley. The latter will act as stage-manager, and Lou Volker as leader of orchestra.

NEGRO MINSTRELSY.

LEW BENEDICT of Duprez & Benedict's Minstrels, which has labored assiduously for a number of years past without enjoying any vacation, finds that he is compelled to take a period of rest; and consequently he will not travel with that company during the coming season. He will retain his pecuniary interest in the troupe, and another comedian will be engaged to supply his place on the end. Mr. Benedict will, however, during the season occasionally appear before the public, fulfilling brief star engagements with other companies.

ADD LEE joined the Marine Minstrels at Concordia, Ky., Aug. 2.

WILLIAM B. FISH, an old-time minstrel performer, of the Sable Harmonists, died in Argenta, Ark. (across the river from Little Rock), on July 29, and was buried on the following day. His last engagement was as treasurer for the late Charley Backus, while managing Broome's Opera-house, Memphis. We are informed that he left a daughter, but her residence is unknown.

LEW JOHNSON states that his Plantation Minstrel Slave Troupe will be reorganized about the end of September, and he advertises for a partner, with capital.

THE MARINE MINSTRELS played on board their floating theatre at Troy, Ind., Aug. 9, Lewisport, Ky., 10, and Grandview, Ind., 11.

JOHNNY PIERCE, formerly with the late Dan Bryant's Minstrels, and Harry Devere have organized a burlesque opera and minstrel troupe, which includes, besides themselves, Teddy O'Lacy, Miss Hattie Pierce, Miss Doda Wesner, Hall and Kennedy, John Donaldson, J. J. Struper, Wylie Morris, and Charles Frowbridge, with an orchestra under the direction of Prof. H. Perry. Charles K. Foote is the general agent. They began a season at San Antonio, Texas, July 23.

LEW BENEDICT formerly of Duprez & Benedict's Minstrels, notifies managers that he is at liberty to engage for the coming season, and he can be addressed care of this office.

BILLY ROBINSON, black dialect comedian, song-and-dance artist and end business, advertises for an engagement.

HAVERLY'S MINSTRELS opened at the Arch-street Theatre, Philadelphia, on the 9th of August, and during their first week attracted large and well-pleased audiences. The troupe is an excellent one in all departments, the comedians—Milt. G. Barlow and George Wilson—in their respective specialties being especially deserving of mention: Primrose and West's songs-and-dances and clog dances, Frank Bell's clever stump speech, Edwin French's banjo solos, Burton Stanley's soprano songs, and the singing in the first part of Thos. B. Dixon and Henry Welling being also attractive features. Milt. G. Barlow was very good in his old darky specialties, and in the concluding sketch of "Nip and Tuck." Haverly's Minstrels will present an entire change of programme during their second and last week.

WM. HAMILTON, the well-known baritone, formerly connected with Simmonds & Slocum's Minstrels, saved from drowning on the 12th inst., at Atlantic City, a couple of young ladies, daughters of Dr. Adler of Philadelphia. Mr. Hamilton, who happened to be on the spot, courageously went to their assistance, and brought them both safe to land.

EPH HORN is convalescing, and was removed last week to the residence of his family in Philadelphia. A project is on foot in that city to give a complimentary benefit to this well-known veteran comedian.

SIMMONS & SLOCUM'S Minstrels give an entertainment in aid of the "Atlantic City Centennial Fund" on the 20th of August, at the New City Hall, Atlantic City, N. J.

MUSICIANS are wanted for Coll & Brother's Combination Slave Troupe, and Lew Johnson can address as per advertisement.

HARRY ROBINSON is reorganizing his minstrel troupe, and will open in Toledo, O., on or about Sept. 13.

CALLENDER'S GEORGIA MINSTRELS performed at St. John, N. B., Aug. 11, 12, 13, 14, and show at Calais, Me., 16, 17, Eastport 18, Machias 19, Cherryfield 20, Ellsworth 21.

A FIRST-CLASS MINSTREL TROUPE is wanted to play on sharing terms at King's Opera-house, Jackson, Tenn., during the State Fair, Oct. 28, 29, 30. See card.

EMERSON'S MINSTRELS commenced a season at the Grand Opera-house, Cincinnati, on Aug. 9, and, writes our correspondent, "their success has been astonishing, people being fairly turned away on the first two nights, and the large theatre jammed full every evening. The company will remain three nights of next (this) week, filling in the next three days in Lexington and Louisville, thence to St. Louis on the 23d, after which to Chicago.....Haverly's Minstrels are to reappear at Wood's Theatre in September."

DUPREZ & BENEDICT'S MINSTRELS were masters of the situation in Brooklyn, L. I., last week. They opened at Col. Sinn's New Park Theatre Aug. 9 to a well-filled house, and continued to increase their business during the week. Their sketches are worthy of praise. Messrs. Fox and Ward's "Silvershower Clog" was a feature. They open at the Boston, Mass., Theatre, Aug. 16.

MUNROE'S MINSTRELS are reorganizing at Reading, Pa., to take the road in a few days. The company will include H. J. Munroe, Harry Morgan, Billy West, Messrs. Weidner, Goldman, Meisse, Lewis, Cook, Shaich, Clouse, and a full brass band, under the management of Jno. M. Shearer.

HAVERLY'S MINSTRELS open at Ford's Opera-House, Baltimore, Md., Aug. 23, for one week.

WOOD'S MINSTREL prima-donna, advertises for an engagement.

PERFORMERS are wanted for Bryant's Minstrels. See card.

DUPREZ & BENEDICT'S MINSTRELS open at Providence, R. I., Aug. 23, Taunton, Mass., 24, Springfield, Sept. 10. Manager Duprez advertises for several performers. The managers also insert a card in another column, in which information can be found of importance to managers who may desire the services for one or more nights of this well-known minstrel organization.

CIRCUSES.

LOUIS FACKMAN of Elmira, N. Y., joined John Robinson's Circus Aug. 10 to play baritone trombone in the band.

MONTGOMERY QUEEN'S CIRCUS was to have exhibited in Kalamazoo, Mich., Aug. 13, Grand Rapids 14, Grand Haven 16, thence to Saginaw, Green Bay, Flint, Port Huron, Detroit, etc. Charley Fish and James Robinson are reported as doing some fine riding, the former turning three consecutive backwards somersaults, and also three forward somersets, while going once around the ring on a bareback horse. Mr. Fish also ran and jumped upon the horse's back, alighting on his feet. James Robinson rode with his little son, Eugene, poised upon his head, without support, while going at a rapid pace.

ED. MORGAN, formerly assistant treasurer and ticket agent of the Great Eastern Circus, has retired from the business and is studying medicine. He intends attending the lectures of the University of New York this Fall and Winter.

THE VAN AMBURGH & CO. show is reported to have encountered many rainstorms since entering Pennsylvania. On the morning of Aug. 13 they drove thirty miles to Ridgway, and arrived too late for the afternoon show. Adolfo Barnabo is said to be riding a capital pad act, and throwing repeated somersaults upon his horse's back.

HIRAM HYMES, snare-drummer, is desirous of forming an engagement with a traveling company or circus. See card.

THE PEOPLE of White Pigeon, Mich., are "hankering" for a circus, they not having seen one since May 16, 1874. A correspondent vouches for this state of affairs.

THOMAS WARD, leaper, with Murray's Circus, states, through our business department, that he is prepared to leap Messrs. Stickney and O'Brien for any sum of money desired.

JOS. W. BOGLE, agent with "advance courier" of Barnum's World's Fair, is requested to telegraph home immediately. See Mrs. H. M. Bogle's card.

T. W. DAY, boss canvasman, is open for an engagement during the remainder of the tenting season. See card.

JOHN H. MURRAY'S CIRCUS is to show in Goshen, N. Y., Aug. 16, Kingston 17, New Paltz 18, Newburg 19, Haverstraw 20.

T. W. COLE of N. Y. and N. O. CIRCUS is billed to exhibit at Albany, N. Y., Aug. 24, Hudson 25, Poughkeepsie 26, Newburg 27, Newark, N. J., 30.

A CARD from Harry Welby Cooke in regard to a recent notice in The London Era from Hubert Cooke, claiming the championship of England and America, can be found in our business department.

LYRALAY CIRCUS, which has been weather-bound in Vincennes, Ind., is to leave there, and perform in Sullivan Aug. 16, thence to Terre Haute.

HOWES' LONDON CIRCUS is to show at Ripon, Wis., Aug. 23, Berlin 24, Harriost 25, Milwaukee 26, Racine 27, Waukegan 28, Fort Wayne, Ind., 30, Logansport 31, Lafayette Sept. 1. The business is reported good.

THE FOLLOWING notice, copied from The Bristol (Eng.) Daily Post, July 21, 1875, speaks of J. Henry Cooke's first appearance in that city:

Mr. J. H. Cooke, who now appears for the first time in Bristol, exhibits a number of extraordinary tricks of jugglery, combined with marvelous horsemanship—perhaps his crowning feat being a lean, unaided by his hands, onto the back of his horse in full gallop, and maintaining his erect position.

"Ashes to Ashes."

INSCRIBED TO HARRY STANWOOD, WHOM DEATH ROBBED OF A KIND AND AFFECTIONATE FATHER,
BY FRANK DUMONT.

Softly close the door and windows,
Let no sunlight near us gleam,
For naught but gloom to-day surrounds us—
Joy has vanished like a dream.
Gone is he we loved so fondly,
To a better land, we trust;
Our's but the same sad story—
"Ashes to ashes—dust to dust."

Though we know he sleeps forever,
Yet his spirit day by day
Hovers near to bless and guard us
When our footsteps go astray;
We have lost a priceless treasure;
We bow to Heaven, kind and just—
Every home has lost a loved one—
"Ashes to ashes—dust to dust."

IN FREDONIA, N. Y., there is a beautiful hall 100x50 feet, with a stage 30 feet deep, well-stocked with scenery and supplied with all modern improvements. A correspondent writes that there is a good opening there for shows.

THE ORIGINAL YOUNG AMERICA, pupil of Gabriel Ravel, is open for engagements as pantomimist, gymnast, dancer, etc. See card.

VICTORIA HALL, Quebec, Canada, which is advertised in H. Morgan's card as having been thoroughly renovated, can be rented by applying to the address given.

TALLMAGE HALL, Washington, D. C., will be completed and open for rental after Sept. 1. Messrs. Tallmage & Co., proprietors, represent it as being fitted up in first-class style, and the only hall in the city on a level with the street. Managers are referred to their card in another column.

THE ZOOLOGICAL GARDEN in Fairmount Park is one of the most attractive resorts in Philadelphia. The constant addition of animals from all countries is making the collection very large and important. An elegant building is being erected for the housing of the elephants and other animals. It will be 196½ feet in length, and of brick, with Ohio sandstone trimmings. There will be wide stalls for the elephants, and tanks for the sea-cows and other animals whose home is in the water. The structure will be completed for occupancy by November. The sea-cows have not yet been placed upon exhibition, as their tanks have not been completed. A large and handsome collection of tropical birds have been received here recently.

MCDONOUGH & EARNSHAW'S MARIONETTES are on their way back from Australia, and will exhibit in Philadelphia early next September.

ABRAHAM BROTHERS, importers and dealers in scenic artists' supplies, advertise in another column.

HALL'S NEW OPERA-HOUSE, Whitehall, N. J., will be completed Oct. 1, and open dates and terms can be obtained from E. W. Hall, who advertises. The house has a seating capacity of 1,500.

E. G. SMITH advertises a lot of show property for sale, including canvases, a stereopticon, a hand-organ, air-guns, lifting and blowing machines, scenery, etc.

QUEEN the magician is to show in East Marshfield, Mass., Aug. 16, South Scituate 17, East Bridgewater 18.

SKETCHES of all kinds, burlesques, farces, etc., are written to order by I. Daveau, who advertises.

PROF. MARTINO, illusionist and ventriloquist, who intends taking an extended tour through California and Australia, advertises for a partner.

MESSRS. NOXON AND TOOMEY, scenic artists from St. Louis, Mo., are in Indianapolis, stocking the new opera-house with full sets of scenery.

A NEW HALL at Owensboro, Ky., having a seating capacity of five hundred, is advertised in another department.

ANGELLO HALL, Jackson, Miss., will seat six hundred, and is lighted with gas and furnished with scenery. For further particulars address the proprietor as per card.

A PARTNER, with from $500 to $1,000, is wanted to take an interest in a good paying entertainment. See Harry Weston's advertisement.

NALY'S OPERA-HOUSE, Greensburg, Pa., can be rented through the proprietor, who advertises. It is a new hall, furnished with a complete stock of scenery, traps, etc.

HARRY WESTON, who is known as an experienced business manager and agent, is at liberty to negotiate with responsible managers, and publishes his address and further information in another column.

THE ADELPHI THEATRE, Grand Rapids, Mich., is open for rental or on shares. See S. S. Ball's card.

A FIRE-RATING RECIPE, for a fire-eater's outfit, is advertised for by "A. F. D."

A POSITION as ticket-agent or assistant is wanted by W. Henry B. See card.

J. BRUCE, show-painter, can be found at his new studio, in Brooklyn, N. Y., advertised elsewhere.

PLAYS, lectures, burlesques, etc., can be obtained of Wm. R. Watts, writer, who advertises.

LYCEUM HALL, Lewiston, Me., which can be found fully described in our business department, is open for rental through the agent of the Lyceum Hall Company.

A NEW OPERA-HOUSE, Millerstown, Pa., is to be dedicated on Aug. 17.

SAM C. ALLEN, programmer, whose address is care of this office, is engaged after Oct. 1.

BANCROFT HALL, Emporia, Kansas, is advertised to rent for the fair week, commencing Sept. 21, or it can be secured on sharing terms.

A PARTNER with from $1,000 to $3,000 is wanted by R. Montague, to join in the management of dramatic company. See card.

BILLPOSTERS are requested to send their addresses to Edward Plotts, who advertises.

FRANCOIS R. BLITZ, magician, Punch-and-Judy performer, etc., whose address find elsewhere, can be engaged for the fairs.

ALF BURNETT, humorist, is giving his entertainments at the principal watering-places, and will shortly visit Cape May, Long Branch and Saratoga. He will be at liberty after Aug. 30, and can be addressed care of this office.

PROF. ST. JEAN is requested to communicate with Rade Hardin, as per advertisement.

MEMO HALL, Pittston, Pa., is advertised to rent. It is furnished with a full stock of scenery, and licensed by the year.

ALF BURNETT JR., agent and contractor, who has had ten years' experience, can be addressed care of this office by managers desiring to engage him.

A PARTNER, with small capital, is wanted by "Mark Quenchem," who advertises, that he would prefer a business man with traveling experience.

CIRCUS MANAGERS, traveling combinations, etc., are referred to Thomson & Vandevere's card, in which they offer a round-top canvas, show-paintings, flags, etc., for sale.

THE JACKLEY FAMILY had arrived in London, Eng.

HARRY JACKSON began an engagement at Day's Concert Hall, Birmingham, Eng., July 26.

NOTICE TO MUSICIANS.
EVANSVILLE, INDIANA, July 28, 1875.
TO THE EDITOR OF THE CLIPPER.—I notice that MESSRS. JOHN F. PERRY & CO. of Boston have published my well-known minstrel end-song entitled "CYARVE DAT POSSUM" and give credit on the frontispiece as follows: "Words and music by Sam Lucas, with Callender's Georgia Minstrels." I have for a number of years resided in this city, and, I think, maintained a reputation for honesty and fair dealing. About fifteen months ago I organized and conducted through one season, in Western cities, HENRY HART'S ORIGINAL COLORED MINSTRELS, and employed Sam Lucas as an end-man. In addition, I am quite well known in the West and South as a professional musician, and I believe, the only COLORED composer and publisher of song-and-dance music and end-songs in the country. These facts will be attested to by Messrs. Cal Wagner, J. H. Haverly, Geo. Wilson, W. W. Barbour, Andy McKee, Steve Rogers and the profession generally, but especially by Milt Barlow, to whom I presented "Cyarve dat Possum," and he is the only one fully entitled to its benefit. Does the fact that Sam Lucas was formerly employed by me give him right to filch and unblushingly appropriate the property of his employer, or make similar appropriation of my song "Daffney"? If so, I merely write this to expose his shameless piracy, and to warn honorable members of the profession against him.
Respectfully, etc.,
21-1t* HENRY HART.

The celebrated Waite Sisters,
HATTIE, NETTIE AND EMMA,
THE SUCCESSFUL CARDS EVERYWHERE,
fulfilling their second engagement at the Theatre Comique, Washington, D. C.; National Theatre, Cincinnati, Aug. 23. At liberty September 13.

OPINION OF THE PRESS.
WASHINGTON NATIONAL REPUBLICAN, Aug. 10, '75.
The Waite Sisters—Hattie, Nettie and Emma—appeared in their own adaptation of the burlesque of "Cinderella," followed by "The Swells of the Period," by Misses Nettie and Emma. Talent has given these sisters success, and there is nothing so successful as success; but, though sure of their positions and applause, they never slur over their work. All that there is in their pieces they conscientiously perform, like true artists. Since they were here last they have improved, and through the week will be the leading feature. Address HARRY WAITE,
21-1t* Theatre Comique, Washington, D. C.
